

SAVED BY ENGLAND'S SEAL.

A Curious Incident that Occurred in a Murder Trial.

Just before his death the late celebrated lawyer Brooks told some interesting tales of his experience. Asked what he considered the most remarkable cases in which he and the equally celebrated John R. Fellows at one time his partner, were the opposing attorneys, Mr. Brooke said: "Every thing considered, I guess the Short case was as remarkable as any. Richard Short, a butcher, stabbed mortally. Capt. Thomas Paelan, at the time Superintendent of the Kansas City Workhouse. In the Kansas City Journal of Dec. 1884, an interview with Paelan was published, in which he gave away the plot which failed to blow up the steamship Queen in the harbor of Liverpool some time before. He gave the names of a number of Irish Nationalists (he was a Nationalist himself) who, he said, were implicated in the plot.

The publication of the interview made the Irish Nationalists all over the country hot under the collar. Paelan came to New York a short time afterward, got into a fight with Short in O'Donovan Rossa's office, and the killing followed. Paelan claimed that he was lured to New York to be murdered. Our contention was self-defence, and the jury made good our claim by acquitting Short on May 7, 1885, after a trial that lasted a week.

The most interesting feature of that trial, though, was one the public has never known anything about. On the day the trial began, a man named Joyce, who was chiefly instrumental in raising the money with which to defend Short, came to me and said there was a young Irish barrister in the court room, who had recently come to the States, and, possibly, might be of some assistance to me.

In a moment or two, a young Irishman with a high brow and a wonderfully intellectual face was brought up. He had the look and bearing of a gentleman and a smile that would win a statue. With the most delicious brogue I ever heard, the young Irishman said:

"Faith! and I'm delighted to meet you, Mr. Brooke. It's little assistance I can be to ye, I'm thinkin', but I'll be at your beck and call, and perhaps I can tell ye a tale now and then about the spalpeens that'll be testifyin' against poor Short. Ye see, I know most of the blackguards. There's like myself, Mr. Brooke. They left their country and came to the States for their country's good. With your distinguished permission, sir, I'll be takin' my seat from day to day during the trial with the learned counsel for the prisoner."

The trial proceeded and Fellows was making out a strong case against my client. The day before the prosecution rested its case we learned that their case would close with the testimony of two or three witnesses, Irishmen of the highest character as far as they were known here, who could not be badgered by cross-examination. I would have given something handsome myself if those witnesses had been safely stuck away in the same bog on the Emerald Isle. I told my Irish associate as much when the court took a recess at noon. He asked me the names of the witnesses whose testimony I feared. I told him. He smiled and remarked that he might be of some use in the case after all. He didn't come into the court room during the afternoon session at all, but when court adjourned for the day I found him out in the corridor waiting for me. When I asked him where he had been he answered:

"Oh, I just thought I'd take a bit of a stroll to keep out of the heat of your burnin' eloquence, Mr. Brooke. By the way, are ye rememberin' what ye told me about the blatherkites that'll most say ugly things under oath the mornin'?" "Ye mind?" "Well, now, Mr. Brooke, don't ye be botherin' your sweet soul about those devils, at all. While I was strollin' this afternoon I was thinkin', and after awhile I was mindin' that I knew somethin' about two of the fellows ye mentioned. Ye were sayin' ye wished they were back in Ireland. Sure, so does the Queen. She'd find work for them at low wages in public institutions were they on Irish soil."

"Mr. Brooke, ye are probably familiar with the fact that there is nothin' in which an Irishman, who has left his country somewhat hastily takes so peculiar an interest as in a legal-looking paper to which may be attached the great seal of England. Now, during me stroll I was mindin' that I have two or three of the great seals of England in me trunk. Now, if ye wouldn't be thinkin' it an interference on me part, while ye are at home tonight in the bosom of your family, I'll prepare a lot of twaddle that won't have a thing to do with the case, but which, when brought into court the mornin' and exposed before the eyes of at least two of those witness devils, may put them a bit out of their reckonin'."

"I readily gave permission and bade him good night. The next morning he appeared in court with a roll under his arm, done up in parchment, that looked like a lawyer's brief. It was tied up in blue ribbons, and it bore the great seal of England. I don't know whether the seal was in its legal place or not, but it was where everybody who sat near my Irish friend could see it. After the opening of the court the first witness called by Fellows was one of the three I dreaded. As soon as he got well into his testimony my Irish associate came over to me and unrolled his parchment, taking particular pains that the witness might always have in view that great seal of England. Then, in most exquisite pantomime, that Irishman, pointing first at a page of his roll, and then at the witness, put on a horrid expression when the testimony appeared (to differ from the record of the roll).

"There was not a written or printed character on all the roll of paper. There must have been thirty or forty pages, every one blank. But you ought to have seen the effect upon the witness of that pantomime and the sight of the great seal of England. He grew white in the face, he tied himself all up in his direct examination and utterly fizzled on the cross examination. When he left the stand Fellows was disgusted. The next witness was called and the next and my associate went through the same performance, with the same effect.

"The people rested and we put in our testimony. I summed up as well as I knew how and Fellows made a masterly argument. The case went to the jury, and the best we hoped for was a disagreement. When the verdict of 'not guilty' was returned I was surprised. When we had got out of the court room I turned to the young Irishman and asked what he thought of the verdict. Without a smile he answered:

"B: the powers it was the sublimest triumph of fraud and perjury I ever knew." "What was that fellow's name?" asked two or three about the table. "Ah! That I must keep to myself," answered Mr. Brooke. "He married an American girl and settled down to the practice of law in Brooklyn. He's over there now, and he might want to try the same game again."

Birds in Storms.

Among birds, swallows and rooks, instead of flying about, remain home when a storm is brewing, and robins hide in bushes or seek the shelter of chimneys. A bee is never caught in the rain, and ants, wasps and spiders will be found to prepare their nests against the coming of a storm many hours in advance.

After Ten Long Years Of Mental and Physical Sufferings and Failures With Common Medicines.

Paine's Celery Compound Completely Cures Mrs. Hopper of Thornhill, Ont.

What a blessing it would be to humanity if all suffering men and women knew just what Paine's Celery Compound is able to do.

The work that cannot be done for the sick in long years of experimenting with other medicines is successfully carried to victory by Paine's Celery Compound in a few short weeks.

The cure of Mrs. Hopper fully proves the assertion made above. After years of failures, misery, agony and despondency, Paine's Celery Compound made a new woman of one who had become a mere wreck—one who was fast nearing the grave. Have faith, sufferer! A strong deliverer is ever ready to help you! From day to day let your hope be centred in Paine's Celery Compound and its power to cure. It has never disappointed any; it cannot fail with you.

Real Mrs. Hopper's wonderful testimony:

"With very great pleasure and satisfaction I wish to add my testimony to what has already been said in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. For a very long time I suffered from general debility and run-down system. Having heard of Paine's Celery Compound, I determined to give it a trial, and I am happy to say it has done for me more good than I can express. For ten years I doctored with all other medicines without any good results; but after using Paine's Celery Compound I am perfectly restored to health, can eat well, digestion is good, and my sleep is sweet and sound. Altogether, I am a new woman. I always recommend Paine's Celery Compound to my friends."
