SACKVILLE.

[Progress is for sale in Sackville by W. J. Goodwin.]

JUNE 8.—Now comes the especially quiet season for this town. The rarest thing of the rare June days or evenings is a social entertainment; by July when visitors arrive there is an occasional party or picnic like an angel's visit, but this month we must content ourselves with the beauties of nature. Sackville never looked better than it did this year at closing. Everything was green and fresh with the apple blossoms just coming out, and the usual closing gale had apparently folded its wings in peace. There were many favorable comments made on our little town by the strangers which is always agreeable to the inhabitants. It is a delightful thing to have the sidewalks mended but last week did seem a strange time for the road commissioners to select for up rooting the walks. However a good job has been done in spite of people forging up toward York street as if to gain a seat in Beethoven hall was the one object in life.

There was a great deal that was entertaining at the different performances that was not on the programme. The greetings and partings of friends, bits of their conversation, questions one would be asked; but watching the young people among the visitors was perhaps the best fun of all, they did have such lovely times. One couple afforded amusement to many at one of the concerts, they were so utterly taken up with each other, the music was nowhere. The girl was extremely pretty which excused the young man from being so gone but did his "onesies" I wonder excuse the needless wretch who pinned the following notice in large letters on his back; "I am in love, don't speak to me." When the victim left the hall he still unknowingly bore the device on his coat.

The class of '98 did not cut up many of the usual capers on taking farewell of their alma mater. It was an exemplary class as it was large; possibly the valedictorian shed a quieting influence over the boys she left behind her. The students were not able to blow up any cannon like the N. B. university lads because all such fire arms have been disposed of long ago, the only thing they indulged in was one of eloquence and red paint on the high white washed fence near the ladies college in which they asserted they were the "hottest babies in the bunch" and said farewell to the girls and Sackvilians, promising to come again.

During closing week a pleasant little whist party was given by Miss Williams in honor of Miss Weir, Moncton, one of the visitors. The guests were Miss Emmerson, Miss Grace Fawcett, Miss Janie Fawcett, Miss Carlyle, Miss Robinson, Miss Steadman, Messrs. Chandler, Turner, H. Ford, Mowbray, L. Harrison, Dr. Sprague. A very pleasant evening was spent, a whist party at this season being a great treat.

The teachers of the ladies college are all dispersed and wandered; Miss Jeeves is teaching vocal music in St. John, Miss Johnstone is visiting in the same city, Miss Chase and Miss Williams are visiting in Calais and Boston, Miss Webster has returned home to Quebec, Mrs. Archibald is in Halifax, Miss Harrington is visiting in Sussex, Miss Cooke is with friends in Truro, Miss McLeod, Pt. de Bute, Miss Thomas, Kentville.
