(CONTINUED FROM TENTH PAGE.)

"I have not beard it. When-" "Well, it's not generally known,' said ly, and he's been ill and confined to the some wax from it and standing the candle like to see him."

Neville shook his head. "No, Trale," he answered; "I don't think I will."

"Come down to see about some alternations at the Court; to brighten it up for his marriage with Miss Audrey," said Tral :. Neville's face grew grim in the darkness. "I fear it's to be pretty soon. Well, I must be going." "Mr. Neville, nothing I can do for you, Neville shook his head and held out his

"No; and thank you for all you have done, Trale," he said. I am off tomorrow."

"Oh, I hope not, sir," said Trale. "Yes. I'm off," repeated Neville, firmly. "I've seen the old place and-well, I've found two friends, at any rate," and he grasped the man's hand tightly. "Keep my visit a secret, Trale. Perhaps I'll come back some day, when" —he smiled grave "-"I've made my fortune.

"Yen needn't wait till then for one man to be glad to see you," said Trale; and as if ashamed of the emotion trembling in his voice, he burried off.

Neville walked on with his hands thrust into his pockets and his head bent thoughtfully, and reached the clump of trees.

He threw himself down at the foot of one of them, and, leaning his back against the thick trunk, got out his pipe and looked round musingly.

together, this is one of the places I should "and we would have picnicked here as we | could not comprehend. used to picnic in the valley. She'd have been glad to come to see the places I'm laughed. "I'd clean forgotten the ants," he said, and he got up and brushed his clothes with his hands.

the dark hill-line, and he felt loath to go. It seemed so very unlikely templatively. After a few minutes he, with that he should ever see Lynne Burrows

He glanced up at the tree. It was an ous limbs toward its fellow-trees.

"It's a long time since I climbed you, old chap," he said, addressing the tree at-fectionstely. The last time he had done so he had dragged Audrey atter him, and they had sat upon the very branch he was now looking at. It looked inviting, and, after a moment's hesitation, he knocked out his pipe and climbed up and made himself comfortable. He refilled his pipe but could not find his match box, and thinking that he had dropped it out of his pocket when he scrambled to his feet off the ants' nest, he was going to descend when he heard a tootand branches before him, but he thought it be must Trale, and was going to call out, at Stoneleigh Burrows at that time of night.

"Some poor devil of a tramp hunting up a night's lodging," he muttered. "I shall frighten him out of his life;" and he put | and a few minutes afterward Neville himhis hand upon the branch to swing himselt | self heard some one approaching. down, when a figure, dimly seen in the dusky darkness, entered the circle of trees and stopped about a dozen yards from that upon which Neville was perched.

Curious to see if his surmise was right. Neville remained where he was and watched, feeling in his pockets as he did so to find a copper for the tramp.

The new-comer stood still for a moment, as if to accustom his eyes to the gloom of the shadow-casting trees; then he went round them one by one, and stopped outside the ring and seemed, to Neville, to be looking about cautiously.

"A tramp," he said. "I'll wait and see what he will do. If he takes to Mother to doubt the evidence of his senses. Earth for a bed, the ants will make it lively for him. I don't wish him any harm but I should rather enjoy seeing him jump

The man came back to where he had first stood, and striking a match, lighted a small piece of candle.

This rather startled Neville. "Tramps don't often insist upon a light to go to bed by," he thought and he looked down curiously at the man.

He had not much the appearance of the common tramp, but, was, indeed rather well dressed in a plain suit of black, and he | in a tone of impatience, said, haughtily: looked to Neville, who had seen many and divers types of mankind, like a respectable | ness over quickly, please." clerk—say a solicitor's. He was an elderly man with a grav beard, which gave him rather a venerable look, and Neville was puzzling at the problem why a respectable | he retorted. "We're quiet enough here." clerk at this time of life should think fit to come to Stoneleigh Burrows and light a candle, when the man gave him another | Was he mad or dreaming, or was that surprise by unbuttoning his frock coat and Lavarick's voice?

taking from under it a small hand-trowel. kind would not have been astonishing, for | to keep himself from crying out. all sorts of curious things occur in such | Lavariok here, and in collusion with places. But this was England and Stone- Jordan! Surely he-Neville-must be leigh Burrows, and-and what on dreaming! His heart beat so tast and furi- fer." earth could a man of this kind want at this ous that it made a singing in his ears, so hand-trowel? Then it flashed upon him. This individual was one of those harmless lun- dan, haughtily," and I am desirous of comatics who amuse themselves by moth hunting. That was it; the man was a natural- as possible." ist in search of some rare specimen of the to dig or scratch for it. speak would in all probability give the us at any moment, and-poor fellow a fit, Neville thought; and be "No," said Neville, with a little start; decided to remain where he was till the man had finished his search and gone.

The man stuck the candle on the slowly from the tree, counting as he to be certain of his accuracy; then went hole easily," and he laughed.

down on his knees and began to dig quick. If Neville had entertained any doubt as down on his knees and began to dig quickly. Every now and then he paused and looked round and listened; and once as been dispelled by the laugh. he did so, a bird, woke by the noise and light, flew out of the tree. The man exdigging again.

Neville wondered what it could be the man was in search of, and ransacked his brain in trying to think of some insect or a fit of perspiration. animal that hid itself under the solid earth, but could think of none.

Suddenly the man uttered a low, suppressed cry of satisfaction, as if he had tound what he had been looking for. Consumed by curiosity, Neville stretched hims If along the branch and leaned over at the imminent risk of tumbling down, and saw what the curious animal was.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

What Neville saw as he leaned down from the branch was a round tin canister, such as cocoa or coffee is packed in, lying at the bottom of the hole the man had dug. Neville had to discard the "naturalist theory" and take up the "buried treasure d round musingly.

"It Syl and I had come back to England choose a bole in Stoneleigh Burrows in which to place his valuables, iustead of have brought her to," he said to himselt, depositing them in the local bank, Neville

The man took up the canister, forced open the lid, and drew out, not a bag of fond of, dear little Syl. Halloo!" he raised | gold or string of gems, but a coil of paper. his hand and knocked something off and This he placed carefully in his breastpocket; then flinging the empty can into the hole, he shoveled back the earth and ness. stamped it down, and strewed some dead The moon was just showing above leaves and bracken over the spot. Then he sat down, lighted a pipe, and smoked cona shake of the head. rose, drew the paper | turn in an hour he was to drive here for from his pocket, and looked round.

As his eyes approached Neville's hiding old oak with a gnarled trunk, and seamed place, Neville quietly and cautiously drew with great hollows, and it stretched spaci- himself up to a higher branch and so escaped detection.

> The man went up to the tree and carefully placed the paper in one of the hollows, first thrusting in his hand to see how deep the hole went. The paper was thus well within the reach of Neville's arm if he should stretch it out.

The old gentleman then returned to his seat at the toot of the other tree and smoked with patience and contentment. Neville was far too curious and discover himself; interested to and making himselt as comfortable as possible, he too waited and watched. Presently the man took the pipe out of anything the man had done, for it remind- | it?" when it occurred to him that he had better ed him of his digger days and the way in Whoever it was, he was coming straight listened for the approach of tootsteps. for the clump, and Neville caught himself | How did it happen that a respectable wondering what business a man could have | elderly clerk should know this trick of the backwoods?

The man got up, resumed his seat and Now, Neville was the last man in the world to play the eavesdropper, and he was about to speak to the man and descend. when a tall figure entered the clump, and Neville, after a moment or two, recognized it as that of his brother Jordan.

Jordan had got on a dress Inverness, with the collar turned up; but Neville was sure of his man. Could it be possible that his proud, haughty brother, the Right Honorable Sir Jordan, had come to Stoneleigh Burrows at this time of night to meet a man who dug up buried tin canisters.

The whole business wore so grotesque and unreal an air that Neville was inclined

That his brother desired to escape observation and recognition was plain from way in which he looked round him—very much as the elderly man had looked before he entered the plantation-and the care with which he kept the coat collar about his face.

It was like a scene in a melodrama, Neville thought, as he looked down at Jordan's pale face and tall, thin form.

Jordan made his way toward the other man, who remained seated, puffing at his pipe and eying Jordan coolly, and Jordan, "You are here? Let us get tris busi-insolent grin "What are you afraid of, Sir Jordan?" At the sound of his voice Neville's heart leaped and the blood rushed to his head.

The man looked up at him with an easy.

He shook and trembled so violently un-Neville could scarcely refrain from der the emotion aroused by the man's laughter. It this had been Australia, and voice that he almost fell from the branch, a diggers' camp, a performance of this and he had to grip it hard and set his teeth hour of night with a piece of candle and a that he could scarcely hear the voices of the two men below him, near as they were. "I am here very reluctantly," said Jorpleting this business and returning as soon of which you speak."

"Right!" said Lavarick, curtly. "Did flying or crawling tribe, and was going any one see you on the way, Sir Jordan?" "I think not," replied Jordan. "But To jump down upon him, or even to some person, some tramp, may come upon frankness.

"You'd rather not be seen holding a you that they are of no value to me," he confab with a stranger at this time of night eh?" said Lavarick, as coolly as before. "Well, I dare say you are right; it would Trale. "He came down rather unexpected- ground by the simple method of pouring look singular, wouldn't it, if you were seen? People would begin to ask themhouse. I didn't know whether you would in it; then, with his back to Neville, paced selves queer questions. But there, you'd have some explanation cut and dried for Went.

He made this measurement twice, as if Right Honorable Sir Jordan Lynne in a

to the indentity of the man it would have

It was the laugh he had heard in the tent on the night he had ransomed Sylvia tinguished the candle in an instant, as if the laugh that had rung in his ears as he frightened, and Neville could hear him saw her borne away across Lavarick's sadbreathing hard as he waited and listened. | dle, and the sound of it now filled him with Then he relighted the candle and tell to an almost irresistible desire to spring upon the scoundrel and knock the life out of him. But he restrained himself with an awful effort which caused him to break out into

That there was villainy hatching between these two was evident, and if he could only learn its character he might be able to thwart them. "It is your nature to be insolent," said Jordan. "When you have finished, will you be good enough to proceed to the matter which brings me here? As I said, I came reluctantly, and it will not require much provocation to induce me to leave Lavarick rose and knocked out his pipe. "You've got the notes?' he said. "I have the notes," replied Jordan, h vari k held out his claw-like hand. "Pase them over, then," he said coolly. Jordan sner d

"Excuse me," he said. "I brought them as an exchange, not as a gift." L varick swore. "We don't trust each other much," he said, sarcastically. Jordan remained silent. "Wnat's to prevent me from knocking you on the head and helping myself to the notes?" said Lavarick, with engaging frank-

"A regard for your own safety," replied Jordan, calmly. "Before I lett the Court I told my servant that I was going for a walk on the Burrows, and if I did not reme. If you murdered me-as I have no doubt you would like to do-"

"Well, I should," assented Lavarick, with cold-blooded candor.

-"You could not conceal the evidence of your crime and escape in that time." He haughtily, and he tapped them with his looked at his watch as he spoke. "As it | toot. is, the time is passing rapidly, and my servant will be here soon. "You refuse to give me the notes first?

said Lavarick. "Absolutely," retorted Jordan.

"I thought you would, and I refuse to hand you the will before I get the notes. I wouldn't trust it into your hands for a moment until I got the 'ready.' What do you propose, Sir Jordan?" and he filled his pipe with insolent leisureness.

Jordan thought a moment, then he said: Some one was coming toward him. He one side; then he got up, knel, and laid side me here; put the—the will on the ground beside you, together with the paper ground beside you, together with the paper This action startled Neville as much as for which I stipulated. Have you brought Lavarick took a paper from his pocket, wait and make sure, and he remained quiet. which the scouts of a prospecting party and, advancing, held it, very tightly, near the candle so that Jordan could read it.

"That's what you want, eh?" "It will do," said Jordan. Now. go back twenty paces and lay it and the will on the ground. I will do the same with the his pipe with an evident air of satisfaction, notes, and we can cross and make the exchange."

Lavarick looked at him admiringly,

"A good dodge!' he said, nodding. "You're wasted over here in this stupid old England, Sir Jordan. You ought to come out with me across the herring pond, where those kind of tricks would come in handy and profitable."

Jordan vouchsafed no acknowledgement of this genuine compliment. "One moment," he said. "The other evening you spoke of the girl." Lavarick puffed at his pipe and nodded, keeping his skew eyes watchfully on Jordan's face.

"Well ?" "You said that you knew where to find

"I don't remember that I did," interrupted Lavarick; "but if I did I spoke the truth. I do know where to find her, and I could put my hand upon her in a few hours." "And that she had the means of proving her identity—you stated that distinctly."

"I did," assented Lavarick. "Well?" Jordan drew a little nearer and looked round, as if he feared that the very trees might have ears. "I should like to see those proofs," he Lavarick laughed with sinister enjoymen-

"How prettily you said that!" and he grinned. "Ot course you would like to see them. I should think so. And once you'd seen them—got 'em in your hands you'd take devilish good care no one else ever saw them." Jordan bit his lip. "You boasted that you could obtain these so-called proofs," he said, ignoring Lavarick's taunt. "If that be so-" he paused. "I should not think it fair for you to run any risk on my behalf."

"You may take your solemn oath that I never shall run any risk on your behalf!" remarked Lavarick, bluntly. "Just so," assented Jordan, impassively.

"I am therefore about to make you an ofhowl of fury, which reminded Neville of the wolves he had heard prowling hungrily "An offer?" repeated Lavarick, suspiciously. "What is it?" "Simply this: that I am prepared to compensate you for any trouble or expense me to steal them and sell them to you. one of the villains, Neville did not see; Well, what's your price?" Jordan did not wince at the brutal plunged into instant darkness. He heard

"It is only right that I should remind flash which momentarily lighted up the

"Then what do you want them for?" demanded Lavarick. "That is my business solely," he re-

"You're afraid that there may be another will, eh?" said Lavarick. "Well, there may be; but, as you say, it's no business of mine. What will you give, eh?'

"I will give you five hundred pounds." Lavarick interrupted him with a coarse laugh of distain.

"I care say! Do you know how I should have to get those proofs?" Jordan did not answer.

"I'll tell you," said Lavarick. I should have to perhaps-I think I'd better not tell you. Anyhow, the price isn't good enough. What! risk-" he put his hands to his neck in a hideous pantomime representing a man being hanged. "Not much, Sir Jordan. No; if I get the thing I'll bring 'em to you and we'll make a bargain. But I've got another job in hand first, and I'm going to do that before I touch anything else. I'm going to find the man who ruined my girl." He stopped and drew a long breath. "But that ain't your business, you'd say and it isn't. It's only mine, and by—"he swore an awful oath—"l'll make it his! I'll find him wherever he is, and-

Jordan coughed as if this subject had no attraction for him, and Lavarick, understanding the cough, broke off and said: "Now then, I'm no more fond of this place than you are. Sir Jordan. Put the notes where you said, and I'll do the same with the will." As he spoke he drew out his revolver. "Don't be atraid," he said, with a grin; "but I think I should feel more comfortable and easy in my mind with my little friend in my hand.' Jordan shrugged his shoulders contemptuously, and unbuttoning his cape, took a pocket-book from it.

"The notes! the notes! No empty pocket-book for me !" said Lavarick, as he stood watching. Jordan took some bank-notes from the book and fluttered them in the feeble candle-light, then laid them down on the ground and set the toe of his boot on

At this moment, white Lavarick, with his back to the tree, was intently watching Jordan's motions, Neville stretched down and took the paper from the hole in the trunk in which Lavarick had placed it.

"The notes are here," said Jordan,

"Right!" rejoined Lavarick, and he turned to the tree eagerly and put his hand in the hole. As he did so, Neville saw him start and utter an impatient oath. Then Lavarick thrust his band in further, down to the bottom of the hollow, and fumbled about searchingly. Then he swore aloud, glaring suspiciously over his shoulder at Jordan.

"What is the matter?" said Jordan. coldly. "Matter? Why"-here followed a string of oaths-"the-the thing was here! I put it here just betore you came up!" The sneer which curled Jordan's lips stung Lavarick to fury, and he passed his hands up and down the trunk of the tree, to feel it there was another opening into which he could have put the will. "You have not got it ?" said Jordan. Got it ? Yes, I've got it ! retorted Lavarick savagely; "I'll put my hand upon it in a moment. Curse it all, I only stuck it in here just before you came. I thought it safer. You might have made a rush for me, you know," and he grinned-"so I thought I'd put it in a hiding place till we'd settled how to exchange-Jordan smiled contemptuously.

"There is no will," he said with suppressed triumph. "There is! By all that's living, there is a will, and it was here a minute—five minutes ago!" broke out Lavarick, hoarsely. "Here, give me the candle;" and forgetful of his undertaking, he advanced toward it. Jordan drew out his dainty revolver and

"Come a step nearer and I fire!" he said. "You are a liar and a fool! You have lost the will. I dety you. Put your hands up above your head, or, as surely as there is a heaven above us, I will shoot you! Don't hesitate; my plan is ready; I shall say you stopped and tried to rob me, and that I killed you in self defense.

Up with your arms or I fire! Lavarick, croached ready for a spring, read determination in Jordan's pale face. and did not dare to touch his own revolver.

"Wait!" he said, hoarsely. "Not a minute. One-two-three!"

Lavarick threw up his hands.
"Now go!" said Jordan, sternly.
"Turn and go without looking round. I shall cover you while you are within range, and fire the instant you turn!'

"Right!" said Lavarick, his lips writhing You have beaten me this time, Sir Jordan. You've got that will; you watched me and stole behind me while I was sitting here, and got it out of the tree." Jordan smiled grimly.

"Yes, that's it; you've got me! I'm beat this time; but," he ground his teeth together, "I'll be even with you, if I swing

"Go!" said Jordan, with an exasperating laugh. "I give you two hours to escape; at the end of that time I shall give information to the police." He had gone a step too far. With a round the camp, Lavarick made a dash for Jordan. At that moment, as Neville leaned excitedly forward to witness the conclusion you may incur in-in obtaining these proofs of the contest, and to join in it if necessary, the candle was extinguished. Whether it "Oh, I see!' said Lavarick. "You want | had been overturned and trodden on by but it was out, anyway, and the scene was darkness, heard a snarling growl, as of some wounded animal: then, unable to hold himself in leash any longer, he leaped to the ground, and colliding against a figure, seized it in his strong grip.

Whichever man it was, he turned upon Neville with furious energy, and Neville knew that it was a struggle to the death.

He set his teeth hard and locked the man with one arm while he felt for his throat with the other.

But his opponent seemed to understand his object, and gripping Nevill: tightly, bore all his weight upon him; and so they writhed to and tro, locked in a hideous

Neither spoke; each seemed to tacitly acknowledge that while life lasted the fight must continue. Neville was surprised by the strength that was put out to meet his, but he attributed it to the tury of rage and despair which must be burning in both Jordan's and Lavarick's breasts. For the moment he did not know which of the villains he had got held of; but presently he felt a beard touch his cheek, and he was con. vinced that it was Lavarick.

"Now," he thought, with a joy which no words can express-"row at last is the hour of reckoning !"

He thought of Sylvia of the last time he had seen Lavarick-with Sylvia in his grasp—and in his veins ran the fierce desire to crush the life out of the scoundrel. To and fro they swayed, the grip of each growing more intence, more intolerable each moment. At last, just when Neville, with a sickening sense of balked vengeance, was feeling faint, he managed to get his leg under that of his opponent, and with a crash the latter came to the ground, Neville falling on top of and still gripping

"You-you scoundrel !" he panted. "At last! Move an inch and I'll kill you where you lie !" and his hands tightened upon the prostrate man's throat.

Then-oh, irony of fate-came a choking voice in response, gurgling out: "Mr .- Mr. Neville ! Good God, is it you? Don't you know me-Trale? (TO BE CONTINUED)

Expert Ladv Dyers.

Mrs. William Warder, Spry, Ont., says: 'Your Diamond Dyes are excellent, and nothing could now tempt me to use any other make of dyes. Diamond Dyes always give me entire satisfaction." Mrs. McNeill, Stanley Bridge, P. E. I., says: "I have used the Diamond Dyes with great success. I recommend them to all ladies who wish to do their own dyeing. For coloring dress goods they are just perfect." Mrs. L. Reid, Newcastle, Ont., says: "We have used your Diamond Dyes for the last ten years and find them to be the best dyes made."

A Real Prize.

'If I had such a wife as Mrs. Negley I think I could be supremely happy. 'Why, I don't consider her especially good-looking, and it is easy to see that she isn't very clever. 'I know, but when her husband starts to tell a funny story she doesn't assume the look of a martyr or try to change the subject.'- Chicago News.

The Victim's Revenge. First Doctor-Well, I've lost old Yel-Second Doctor-You didn't expect him to recover, did you? First Doctor-No; but I didn't think The relations of a man's wife always expects more of him than he expects of him-

A CARRIAGE MAKER

Suffered ten years from weak heart action and nervousness.

> Cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

No trade or profession is exempt from disease or derangement of the heart and nerves. The pressure of work and the mental worry are bound to produce serious.

Mr. Donald Campbell, the well-known carriage maker of Harriston, Ont., said: "I have been troubled off and on for ten years with weak action of my heart and nervousness. Frequently my heart would palpitate and flutter with great violence, alarming me exceedingly. Often I had sharp pains in my heart and could not sleep well at night. I got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and from them derived almost immediate benefit. They restored vigor to my nerves and strengthened myentiresystem, removing every symptom of nerve or heart trouble, and enabling me to get restful, healthy sleep."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cure palpitation, throbbing, dizzy and faint spells, nervousness, sleeplessness, weakness, female troubles, after effects of grippe, etc. Price 50c. a box or 3 for $1.25, at all druggists. T. Milburn & Co., Toronto, Ont.

LAXA-LIVER PILLS cure Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia. They do not gripe, sicken or weaken. Every pill acts perfectly. the sharp snap of a revolver, and saw the