FREDERICTON.

[Progress is for sale in Fredericton by W. T. H. Fenety and J. H. Hawthorne.]

Aug., 9.—"Riverside" the beautiful residence of Mr. John A. Morrison presented a most enchanting appearance on Friday evening on the occasion of the lawn party, given by his son, Mr. Roy Morrison and for their guest Miss Carrie Murchie of Calais. The handsome grounds surrounding the house were brilliantly illuminated with Japanese lanterns, the whole garden presenting a beautiful and fairylike scene. On the lawn, a large platform had been erected for dancing. Offen's orchestra was stationed on the broad veranda and played a dance programme of fifteen numbers, with three supper extras. Several marquees were dotted over the grounds and provided delightful resting places for tired dancers. In a large booth which was artistically decorated were served ices, sherbets and iced drinks. It was two o'clock before this delightful party broke up and the guests bade farewell to a charming scene. Among those present were:—

BLOODLESSNESS,

Or as Doctors Say "Anæmia" is Cured By
Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

An æmic person is usually weak, listless and pale. He gets out of breath on slight exertion, the pulse is rapid and weak and the sleep frequently disturbed. The feet and hands are cold, ankles swollen at night and there is puffiness under the eyes in the morning.

Since the cause of anæmia is lack of a sufficient quantity of red blood corpuscles in the blood, a cure can only be effected by a treatment which will increase the number of red corpuscles and so improve the quality of the blood.

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Contains the very elements which are found lacking in the blood of an æmic person. It creates new red corpuscles and on this account has proved wonderfully successful as a positive cure for pale, weak, men and women suffering the ills of poor blood and exhausted nerves, 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or EDMANSON, BATES & CO., Toronto.

CRICKET.

KILLING ARCTIC GAME.

Prof. Nathorst Says Tourists are Annihilating the Reindeer in Spitzbergen.

The western shores of Spitzbergen have become very easy of access because tourists steamers make several visits to this Arctic land every summer.

Nearly half way up the coast, at Advent Bay in Ice Fiord, a very comfortable little hotel was opened two or three years ago, and tourists are now able to enjoy nearly all the pleasures of the Arctic regions without foregoing the comforts of civilization.

This thoroughly Arctic land is near enough to Europe to be easily reached, and it is added permanently to the list of tourist attractions for these realms of the glacier and ice mountains have glories all their own, whose particular charm and grandeur inspire the enthusiast with the most inveterate globetrotter.

One might imagine that the flat expanse of the pack or drift ice would be simply monotonous, but tourists to Spitzbergen may always see it under circumstances that give new zest to pleasure travelling.

It alone is worth the trip, on a splendid Arctic morning, to see the sky filled with the most brilliant sunshine and the steamer plunging through big and blue sheets of ice, dazzling white on the surface, but blue or green on the edges. It is a unique and beautiful sight and one of the distinctive attractions of the northern journey.

There is, however, one phase of the tourism in Spitzbergen that is not commendable. Some of the tourists are accused of slaughtering the big game, and particularly the reindeer, in a most unsportsmanlike and barbarous manner.

One of their ardent is restrained they will certainly exterminate the reindeer in that region without serving any purpose, except the mere love of killing.

Prof. A. G. Nathorst, the well-known Swedish explorer, brings this indictment against them, and all real sportsmen and the public generally will share the indignation he expresses at ruthless butchery.

In the professor's account of his fruitful explorations in the summer of 1893 he says that while at Recherche Bay on the west coast of Spitzbergen his party had an opportunity to hunt reindeer. On earlier occasions when he had hunted in these high Arctic regions he had always found the animals exceedingly shy, because they had been hunted before.

Last year, however, he reached the land so soon after the ice had gone out that the deer had not been disturbed by hunters. He supposed they would be as shy as usual, and so his party approached them with the utmost caution, crawling upon their hands and knees, dragging themselves forward on their stomachs and keeping carefully out of the wind.

Much to his surprise, he found that he and his men had only to show themselves openly to attract the animals, which, moved by curiosity, would come within range of their own accord. There was no pleasure whatever in hunting them. At one time three reindeer approached within ten paces of the spot where the professors stood, while two big bucks, with fine antlers, stood gazing only a little further off. He had his rifle at his shoulder, but of course refrained from shooting. His men agreed with him that it was mere butchery to kill animals that would come forward to be shot, and so they killed only a few that they wanted for food.

Later in the year the expedition returned to Advent Bay and found that the tourists had been making wholesale war on the reindeer. Parties had been made up to go on hunts lasting for several days, and every animal that came within range was shot down. Not the slightest use was made of the carcasses, but they were left to lie and rot where they fell. No sportsmanlike qualities were exercised or required in this sort of work. The Swedish explorer characteristically these performances as disgraceful and barbarous and says they cannot often be repeated without annihilating the reindeer on West Spitzbergen.

There are very few if any Arctic regions where large game is so plentiful that there is not danger of its entire disappearance if it is assiduously overhunted. Mr. F. G. Jackson, who is a keen sportsman and has lived three years in Franz Josef Land, would not permit any waste of game by his party and never allowed life to be taken for the sake of sport alone. He said he thought that even in a country so rich in animal life as Franz Josef Land, it would take only a few years to kill all the larger game.

He found walrus fairly plentiful, and yet he was certain it would not pay steam whalers to hunt them in those waters for more than two years in succession.

In the past few years a good many walrus have been killed for dog feed by exploring vessels that have visited the Smith Sound region, and reindeer and other game have been killed there in unnumbered quantities by white men.

One of the best-known Arctic authorities has expressed the opinion that the food supply of the Smith Sound Eskimos was thereby being endangered. These few hundreds of people are largely isolated from the rest of the world and are wholly dependant upon the slender resources of the surrounding land and waters.

It would only be humane to conserve their small food supply. Any white men who cannot get along in the Smith Sound region without endangering the lives of the natives had better keep away. An expedition has sailed this month for Smith Sound, and among those on board is a party from Boston, whose only ostensible purpose in visiting the home of the Arctic Highlanders, according to the published reports, is to "hunt walrus, bear and reindeer."

Possibly the report that they are merely going to hunt for amusement is inaccurate, and at any rate when they see clearly the conditions of Eskimo life there they will probably abstain from reckless hunting.

It is certain that Mr. Paary, in whose behalf this expedition is going north, would not approve of any enterprise that would add to the hardships of life among the natives.

An army of hunters, however, would have a hard task to deplete to a serious extent the bird life of the Arctic region. All explorers tell of their prodigious numbers, and Prof. Nathorst adds his contribution. He tells of a cliff rising perpendicularly from the sea on the south coast of Bear Island, where he believes there were, last summer, actually millions of auks, kittiwakes and fulmars.

Every ledge and every protection was thick with birds and was fired myriads of them rose in the air and hovered about the cliffs like a snow squall, and yet there still seemed to be quite as many left behind on the rocks.

A Novel Drink.

The agony of thirst is often experienced by travellers in the sand-belts of South Africa. Doctor Schulz, in "The New Africa," tells of a strange device to which his bearers and guides resorted one night when the pangs of thirst became unendurable.

We had no water that night, and the boys got so thirsty that some of them went off to search the neighborhood, carrying firebrands as a protection against possible lions.

A shout in the distance induced us to walk over to where they were. There we were surprised to find two boys squatted on the ground holding the legs of one of their companions, who had gone down head first into an ant bear hole in search of water.

By and by he gave a signal and was hauled up, but what was our astonishment to find, when he was pulled out, that he had hold of the legs of another boy, who in his turn brought up a calabash full of wet mud that he had dug up at the bottom of the ant-bear pit.

This moist earth was duly shared by the crowd, who filled their mouths and sucked such fluid out of the stuff as it contained, and then spat out the remaining sand.

When the first lot were enjoying the moisture thus obtained another cycle of boys took up the job, and so the night was spent by them in getting up the mud with which to wet their parched throats.

As for ourselves, we could not touch it; it was accompanied by a fearful smell of decaying material, like sulphureted hydrogen, which we could not stomach.

Angelina: "When one of us dies I shall go and live somewhere in the country, all among the woods and wild flowers."

Edwin: "But, dearest, supposing that you were to die first?"

Angelina: "Oh, don't let us think of anything so dreadful."
