The Bullfrogs.

If you live out in the suburbs, You will always know when spring Has assumed control of weather, By the way the bullfrogs sing There is something weirdly mournful In the music from the bog. The low drumming and shrill whistling Of the versatile frog frog!

If the nightingale's wan spirit Haunts the bullfrog, as they say, There's no wonder that the froggie Pipes a sorrow-laden lay! But to any one that's homesick, Or is feeling rather dim, He will wish the whole swamp chorus Had at once been stricken dumb!

There are frogs that are quiet harmless, Such as railroad frogs, and those whose hind legs we see before us. Fried and crispy, minus toes; But you often hear 'em think so. And it makes your cold blood creep! When the legs are served, still twitching, A most lamentable "peep!"

When you're coming from the clubroom, Or the dance, quite late at night, These amphibious young croakers, In a joy take delight, And along the lonesome stretches Ere you reach the well-known gate, They will make you see gnat pictures, Or will try at any rate!

There's the cricket's chirp of autumn, And the locust's monotonous hum, There's the "wh-oo-oo" of the owl In the forest's solitude! There's the hum of the mosquito And the whistle of the quail, But suburbanites hear of these, The green bullfrog's woful wail!

Unique.

He was a great detective, An enemy to crime, And when he chased a villain He caught him every time.

Whenever plots were started To wrong folk here below, There in disguise, was present The plotters' watchful foe.

In bringing rogues to justice He simply couldn't fail; The villain's goose was wasted When he was on the trail.

He was a great detective, He had a taking way, And he never got befuddled— For he was in a play.

On Dress-Parade.

Truth, the shameless, can't be trusted To select her daily dress; Her attire must be adjusted To our views of comeliness.

So with cunningness we fashion Robes for her to suit our style, Co. with fraud and sewed with passion Trimmed with subterfuge and guile.

Thus we ask her to our houses, Confident her presence there Is our guests no fear arouses, From our friends will cause no stare.

Thus we meet her when we visit, To us in drawing-room and street Think we know her, but we miss it— Her disguise is quite complete.

Unto the End.

I know not where tomorrow's path may wend, Nor what the future holds, but this I know, Whichever way my feet are forced to go, I shall be given courage to the end.

Though God that awful gift of his may send We call long life, where headstones in a row Hide all of happiness, yet be it so; I shall be given courage to the end.

If dark the deepening shadows be that blend With life's pale sunlight when the sun dips low, Though I speed by and sorrow's steps are slow, I shall be given courage to the end.

I do not question what the years portend— Or good or ill whatever wind may blow; It is enough, enough for me to know I shall be given courage to the end.
