

One of the prettiest of the autumn weddings was that of Miss Emma Hopper daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Hopper and Mr. Frederick L. Tafts which took place Tuesday afternoon at the residence of the bride's sister Mrs. H. H. Mott, Germain street. Rev. G. O. Gates performed the marriage ceremony which was witnessed by the immediate relatives only of the contracting parties.

The bride, who is a very pretty and charming young lady, wore a travelling gown of lawn cloth trimmed with dahlia velvet and cream satin, and wore a most becoming hat of dahlia velvet.

Mr. Mott's handsome residence was beautifully decorated, the parlors being bright with pink and white flowers and smilax and the hall having artistic arrangements in yellow and white flowers.

After the ceremony a luncheon was served and later Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle left on a trip to the United States. The presents received by the bride were numerous and the thought and taste displayed in their selection was evidence of the high esteem in which she is held by her friends.

Speaking of weddings recalls a magnificent trousseau just completed in this city for a November bride—a slender, willowy little brunette, of acknowledged beauty, with a bright piquante face tinted with warm, rich coloring. The little bride-elect's home is not in this city but she is well known here, and for several weeks now she has been in town selecting a trousseau which excited the deepest admiration of those who were privileged for a peep at it after it was finished. It was a case where a few hundred dollars more or less did not count, as her father's means would warrant any reasonable expenditure, and she had carte blanche in the matter. Under these delightful circumstances and with good taste to aid, it is any wonder the result was charming.

It is not possible to give the trousseau in detail but a description of some of the handsome gowns will, I am sure, be of deep interest to the fair readers of this department.

First in importance, of course, comes the wedding gown of heavy ivory brocade satin, lined throughout with the richest white tulle. The bodice was elaborately trimmed with duchesse lace and heavy pearl trimming; it was cut the least bit low, and the front down to the waist was of shirred chiffon. The revers of white satin were almost covered with pearl trimming in a dainty leaf and flower pattern and the guimpe was of white accordion pleated chiffon thickly fringed with pearls. The waist was finished with a folded belt and large bow. The skirt had a four and a half yard train on the inside of which were four narrow tulle ruffles; on either side of the front breadth there was an opening at the bottom extending about to the knee and in this was inserted heavily pleated chiffon with a deep finished edge. With it will be worn a veil and real orange blossoms.

Perhaps the daintiest of the several reception gowns was a pale green and white of some soft shimmering silken material that might be called either a grenadine or a gauze; it was a lovely thing however and was profusely trimmed with Renaissance lace and chiffon. The bodice had quantities of the lace, and a shirred yoke of pink chiffon; narrow ruffles of white chiffon were edged with narrow black velvet ribbon. The two frills on the overskirt were also edged with ribbon and chiffon; several medallion buckles set with small brilliants were used on the waist.

One of the loveliest evening gowns was of pale blue shade of satin that is almost indescribable in its delicate silvery-like loveliness. The scallops of the overskirt were trimmed with three ruffles of the satin gathered through the middle, and the bodice was arranged with white duchesse lace, blue chiffon and pearls. The narrow shoulder straps were covered with pearls, and ruffled chiffon fell about half way to the elbow.

cloth, the waist having a tucked yoke of rose silk shot with white, with which the dress was lined throughout; the front of the yoke which extended clear down the front had at the top three short rows of black velvet ribbon, perhaps an inch wide, finished with loops and steel buckles. A great deal of chinchilla fur and Renaissance lace are also used on the waist, and the skirt which has a triple effect around the front is also trimmed with chinchilla and rows of stitching. In this the little bride-elect is entrancing, the delicate shades of the waist trimmings being especially becoming to her gypsy like beauty. Another gown for ordinary wear is of navy blue cloth with a white tucked taffeta front, and bands of orange velvet.

The travelling dress is of dark blue broadcloth, the coat and double skirt lined with cerise silk and trimmed with rows of stitching. The waist is of dark blue silk tucked almost all over and has a white satin front; the blue revers coming to the waist are trimmed with double rows of very small gold buttons. With this gown will be worn a black velvet hat with full crown; both it and the brim have ovals of black satin and the only other trimmings are three rich black tips falling over the brim at the left, and a large cut steel buckle. The hats to be worn with other street gowns were made in New York.

A long opera or evening wrap is of pearl grey lined with pale pink brocade and has a very large chinchilla collar. Long stoles of accordion pleated chiffon finished with rows of the same material hang from the neck and the fastenings are large steel buckles.

Included in the trousseau were other lovely evening and street gowns and many separate waists, a light blue silk shirt waist attracting more than usual attention because it was made by the future bride herself in her spare moments, just because she had seen one like it which came from Paris, and perhaps it was easier to make it herself than to explain to anyone else just how it was done. Miss Duffy of King Street planned and made most of the trousseau. There were two or three silk dressing jackets in pale blue, pink and white, and any amount of lingerie all of the shiest and most costly kind. The home of this favored young lady will be in Montreal and as her future husband is a man of means her journey through life promises to be bright indeed—that is in so far as money can make it so. Her friends in this city will wish her every happiness and prosperity in her married life.
