The expert tea taster carefully weighs the tea, pours a quantity of fresh-boiled water on it—lets it draw for a few minutes, then tastes it—Tully's Elephant Brand Tea stands this test which differs not from the right way of making tea.

Maud and the Judge Again.

Maud Mulder jumped on her time worn bike for an evening out at the dusty pike.

An old drop frame of a "raw down gear" with a rattle the sleeping dead could hear!

The judge came pouncing along behind, Out airing his great judicial mind.

He roared the figure neat and trim And graceful motion of hidden limb.

And he said to himself in his grave delight: "Whatsnatter with Maudie? She's all right!"

He drew beside her and asked her flat: Why she rode such an old ice cart as that?

And she said saleslady could ill support Such wheel as the judge of the district court.

He told her she could on a chainless ride With a diamond frame, if she'd be his bride.

Or if she would bust up his solo life They would tandem together as man and wife.

Maud bit at the bait like a hungry trout And the old judge smiled as he yanked her out!

They ride on a tandem now, of course. But Maud has to work like a treadmill horse!

For the judge has learned how to sit and shirk And let his darling do all the work.

He weighs two hundred and fifty one. But the poor girl thinks it an even ton!

And she often says with a pain rent heart: "I wish I was back on my old ice cart!"

'Of all true words that I ever spoke, 'The truest are these: 'He's a bloomin' fake!'

Summer Dusk.

From the sky the colors fade, And a star, snow white, Hangs o'er the lonely glade On the brow of night.

Slowly crumbles and disappears The hill in the gloaming sea, And swiftly the lithe ba' veers Round the silent tree.

The firefly's elixir spark Embers o'er the dewy mead; The moon beams silvers the dark And the whispering reed.

And, while the lone loon's cry Floats on the breeze' cool, Day sleeps and the purple shadows lie And dream on the lily bed pool.

A Tantalus Clock.

A singular case has just been decided in Germany after occupying nearly a year in trial. When Prince Bismarck died, two Hamburg photographers bribed a watcher in the room to allow them to take a flashlight picture of the dead chancellor. They tried to sell the photograph, but the Bismarck family interferred. The photograph itself furnished the evidence which convicted the persons concerned. The men who took the picture did not notice a clock on the wall, which was reproduced in the photograph and recorded the exact moment when the view was taken. It was known who was on watch at that moment, and the faithless watcher gave the name of the photographers. The pictures have been suppressed, and the photographers sentenced to jail.

THOUGH A FORMER CONVICT.

How a Chicago Chief of Police Won One Man's Firm Allegiance.

Major R. W. McClaughry, who recently resigned the wardenship of the Joliet penitentiary to accept a like position at Leavenworth, Kan., had one champion on the Chicago police force who, up to his death, a few years ago, would fight for him at any time. This police officer was an ex convict and served his sentence of one year for larceny at Joliet during McClaughry's first administration as warden. Upon his release from prison the young man returned to Chicago, where he had many friends who were willing to give a helping hand. The offence for which he was sent to prison was done more in the spirit of a boyish prank than with any criminal intent, but he was in the company of an ex convict at the time, and but for that fact he might have escaped with a short jail sentence.

Soon after his return to Chicago he got a position in a wholesale house, and he applied himself to the work with more than ordinary energy. He attended church regularly, something he did not do before going to prison, and his every act proved him worthy of the confidence placed in him by his friends.

Time went on, and he made application for a position on the police force. According to the rules of the department no man who has ever been convicted of a felony can become a policeman, and in order to properly fill out the application blank he had to perjure himself. The signers of his application were men of prominence in ward politics, and he had no difficulty in securing his appointment. He was stationed at a downtown crossing when Major McClaughry was appointed Chief of Police under Mayor Washburne in 1891.

One day the policeman was recognized by an ex convict. They had worked together in the same shop in prison, and the policeman had once whipped the other fellow for abusing a crippled convict. The opportunity to get even with the blue coat for the chastisement given years before presented itself, and in less than an hour a commanding officer was told of the policeman's imprisonment at Joliet.

Major McClaughry sent for the officer, and when the latter entered the chief's office, ignorant of why he was called there, Major McClaughry instantly recognized him. The officer did not deny his identity. He looked his chief squarely in the face and said:

'Chief, it is true; I have been a convict in the Joliet penitentiary. I was sent there some years ago for a crime for which the severest punishment ought not to have been more than thirty days in jail. I was a victim of circumstances, and I have never complained. I served eleven long months for my youthful folly, and it is unnecessary for me to tell you my prison behavior. Friends induced me to go on the police force, and I have performed my duties faithfully as an officer of the law. I am married and the father of three children. It is for my wife and little ones that I plead. You have the power to discharge me from the police force and perhaps send me back to Joliet for committing perjury. I am an ex-convict; treat me as you think you should be treated yourself if our positions were reversed. Tears were in the Major's eyes. He rose from his chair, and grasping the policeman by the hand, said:

'Go back to your crossing, officer, and so long as you behave yourself you need have no fear of losing your position while I am chief.'

Forecasting Disease.

In a recent lecture on electricity Prof. Thompson related how Boston physicians had been able, with an X-ray tube, to detect the presence of the microbes of pneumonia in the lungs before any symptoms of that disease were felt by the patient, or were even perceptible by ordinary pathological examination.
