

BEARS UP YUKON WAY.

THE KLONDIKE KING TELLS OF AN EXCITING INCIDENT.

They are all sorts of queer bears up there but the Bald-face Ones are Dangerous—They Never Give Way When They Meet Anything on the Trail.

'Talkin' of bear—'

The Klondike King paused meditatively and the group on the hotel porch hitched their chairs up closer.

'Talkin' of bear,' he went on; 'now up in the northern country there is various kinds. On the Little Pelly, for instance, they come down that thick to feed on the salmon in the summer time that you can't get Indian or white to go higher than a day's travel to the place. And up in the Rampart Mountains there's a curious kind of a bear called the 'side-hill grizzly.' That's because he's traveled on the side hills ever since the flood, and the two legs on the down-hill side is twice as long as the two on the up-hill. And he can out-run a jack rabbit when he gets steam up. Dangerous? Catch you? Bless you, no. All a man has to do is circle down the hill and run the other way. You see, that throws mister bear's long legs up the hill and the short ones down. Yes, he's a mighty peculiar creature, but that wasn't what I started in to tell about.

'They've got another kind of bear up on the Yukon, and his legs are all right, too. He's called the bald-face grizzly, and he's as big as he is bad. It's only a fool white man that thinks of going huntin' him. Indian's got too much horse-sense. But there's one thing about the bald-face that a man has to learn: he never gives trail to mortal creature. If you see him comin', and you value your skin, why, get out of his path. If you don't, there's bound to be trouble. If the bald face met Beetzeeb, he'd not give him an inch. O he's a selfish beggar, take my word for it. But I had to learn all this. Didn't know anything about bear when I went into the country, excepting when I was a youngster I'd seen a heap of Cinnamon of that little, black kind. And they was nothin to be scared at.

'Well, after we'd got settled down on our claim, I went up the hill one day, lookin' for a likely piece of birch to make an axe handle for the one my partner'd broke. But it was pretty hard to find the right kind, and I kept goin' and goin' for nigh on two hours. Wasn't in no hurry to make my choice, you see, for I was herdin' down to The Forks all the time, where I was goin' to borrow a log-bit from Old Joe Gee. When I started I'd put a couple of sour-dough biscuits and some sow-belly in my pocket in case I might get hungry. And I'm tellin' you that little lunch came in right handy before I was done with it.

'Bime-by I lit upon the likeliest little birch saplin' right in the middle of a clump of jack pine. Just as I raised my hand axe I happened to cast my eyes down the hill. There was a big bear comin' up, swingin' along on all fours right in my direction. It was a bald-face, but little I knew about such kind.

'Jest watch me scare him,' I says to myself, and stayed out of sight in the trees.

'Well, I waited till he was about a hundred feet off, then I runs out into the open. 'Ooh! ooh!' I hollered at him, exceptin' him to make off like chain lightning.

'Make off? He jest throwed up his head for one good look and came a comin'.

'Ooh! ooh! I hollered louder'n ever. But he jest came a comin'.

'Concern you?' I says to myself, gettin' mad. 'I'll make you jump the trail.'

'So I grabs my hat, and wavin' and hollerin', starts down the hill to meet him. A big sugar[pine] had went down in a wind-fall and lay about breast high. I stops jest behind it, old bald-face comin' all the time. It was jest then that fear took me. I yelled like a Comanche as he raised to come over the log, and fired my hat full in his face. Then I lit out.

'Say! I rounded the end of that log and put down the hill at a two-minute clip, old bald-face reachin' for me at every jump. At the bottom was a broad, open flat, quarter of a mile to timber and full of nigger heads. I knew if I slipped I was a goner, but I hit only the high places till you couldn't a-see my trail for smoke. And the old devil snorting lot after me. Midway across he reached for me, jest strikin' the heel of my moccasins with his claw. Tell you I was doin' some tall guessin' jest about then. I knew he had the wind of me, and that I could never make the brush, so I pulled my little lunch out of my pocket and dropped it on the fly.

'Never locked back till I struck the timber, and then he was mouthing it in a way which wasn't nice to see, cussin' how close he'd been to me. I never slacked up. No, sir! Jest kept hittin' the trail for all there was in me. But jest as I came round a bend, hell bent for election, what'd I see in the middle of the trail before me and comin' my way, but another bald-face.

'Whoof! he says when he spotted me, and he came a running.

'In a flash I was about and hittin' the back trail as fast as I'd come. Clean forgot all about the other bald face, the way this one was pulling after me. First thing I knows I seen him moosin' along kind of easy, wonderin' most likely what'd become of me and if I tasted as good as my lunch. Say! when he seen me he looked real pleased. And then he came a jumpin' for me.

'Whoof! he says.

'Bang! I goes, straight off the trail, sideways a-plungin' and a clawin' through the brush like a wild bull. By that time I was I was clean crazed. Thought the whole country was full of bald faces. Next thing I knows—whoof! I comes up again at something in a tangle of wild blackberry bushes. Then that something hits me a swipe and closes in on me. Another bald-face! And then I knew I was gone for sure. But I made up a mind to die game, and of all the rampin' and rippin' and tearin' you ever see that was the worst.

'O my God! O my wife! it says. And I looked and it was a man I was hammerin' into kingdom come. 'Thought you was a bear,' says I. 'He kind of caught his breath and looked at me, then he says, 'same here.' 'Seemed as though he'd been chased by a bald-face and hid in the blackberries. So that's how we mistook each other. But by that time the racket on the trail was something horrible, and we didn't wait to explain matters. That afternoon we got Joe Gee and some rifles and came back loaded for bear. Mebbe you won't believe me, but when we got to the spot there was the two bald-faces lyin' dead. You see, when I jumped out sideways they came together, and as each refused to give trail to the other, that was the result.

'Talkin' of bear—'

The Klondike King paused eloquently, then headed the delegation in the direction of the bar.

COUNTED SIXTY CENTS A DOLLAR.

An Astronomical Treasurer's Mistake With His Trust Account.

Not long ago it happened in a Western city that the members of a rich society lodge became very much exercised over what seemed to be a serious shortage in the account of their treasurer. A popular young astronomer had been elected unanimously to that office all those that might have been his rivals withdrawing their names in the midst of much hilarity on the ground that they were not to be compared with him when it came to handling large figures. The man was known to be a soul of honor, a gentleman and one whose only fault was an absent-mindedness which at times became annoying to his friends as well to himself.

The treasurer's friends were unwilling to believe that he had erred wittingly, especially as he appeared more surprised and grieved than anyone else, declaring, with tears in his eyes, that he was unable to understand how it happened. He had to admit the correctness of his accounts, for he had gone over them time and again without finding a mistake of any kind. But he was also sure that he had deposited every dollar in a bank as soon as he had received it, and the only explanation he could find was, that in his absent-mindedness he had drawn on the lodge's account, thinking that it was his own.

A committee was appointed to go through the books and its members fell to work at once. They were soon a most puzzled set of human beings. Night after night, they struggled with bills, receipts, deposit slips, etc., comparing and checking off. The books were kept beautifully; every single item was entered correctly; nothing seemed to be wrong, and yet the shortage remained undiminished. No one imagined for a moment that the astronomer whose proficiency in the higher mathematics was well known, could have made any mistakes in figuring. The proposition to see whether his addition was correct was, therefore, not received with favor when made by some member, but it was the only thing left for them to do. Thus the mystery was solved at last.

It was found that everywhere serious mistakes had been committed in the adding of the columns of cents and the first column of dollars. There seemed to be some kind of system in the mistakes, too, but their cause remained incomprehensible until a member, after considerable figuring on his own book made the surprising statement that the treasurer had, with fatal consequence, been counting sixty cents as a dollar, thus making the accounts show a false surplus much larger than the actual one.

'Oh, now I have it,' the treasurer exclaimed, while the members of the investigation committee laughed until they fell off their chairs. 'I have right along been figuring with hours and minutes you know—just as I am doing most of the time in the observatory. Hooray, boys, I'll set them up the next time we meet.'

Two Chickens.

Twenty five dollars for a pair of spring chickens is a liberal price, yet a Massachusetts farmer rejected it. His pair of chickens, he thinks are quite unique, for they are twins, five weeks old, and it is said that two chickens from the one egg have never before been proved to live beyond eight days. The buff brabma hen laid rather a large egg but no one thought much about it until one morning the farmer saw the two bills instead of one trying to break out of the shell. He quickly removed the egg to the kitchen, extricated the young chicks, wrapped them in cotton batting, and placed them in the oven. For three weeks the chickens were kept indoors on diet of malted milk and brandy dropped down their throats with a medicine dropper. The twins are now hale and hearty, and run about the yard as vigorously as any of their comrades. One peculiarity, however, distinguishes them from their mates. They are exclusive little aristocrats, and neither of them will associate with any other chicken except his twin.

with the paint brush is like that "stitch in time" that "saves nine." Paint is a labor-saver in the home. A glossy, painted surface discourages dust. But the labor of painting is lost if you use the wrong paint.

Different surfaces call for different coverings. Housewives don't put rag carpet on the parlor floor nor velvet carpet in the kitchen. They wouldn't suit. Paint making has progressed more than carpet making. There's a special paint for every kind of painting. Looks best, wears best.
