With the thermometer in the vicinity of the nineties it would hardly be imagined that dancing would be the most agree able of recreations and yet when one is young, full of spirits and possessed of energy which makes all sorts of impossible pastimes pleas apt what does it matter how the thermometer registers, and what are a few degrees more or less. At less that was the opinion of the young folk who danced away the warm hours of Monday evening at the Mechanic's Institute and lingered on until the first faint sign of Thursday's dawn was visible.

The supper room was delightfully cool and the avish use of sweet peas made the air there and in he sitting out nocks most fragrant.
