tes lying to the esteem in which the young couple are held.

Another pretty wedding took place on Thursday afternoon, at the home of Miss George Payson, 170 Waterloo street, when Rev. G. W. Payson of Fredericton, was wedded to Miss Louise Payson of Halifax. Rev. R. W. Weddell officiated. The happy couple left on the evening train for their future home in Fredericton.

FREDERICTON.

[PROGRESS is for sale in Fredericton by W. H. T. Fenety's and J. H. H. thorne.]

SEPT. 19.—One of the most brilliant society events which has ever taken place in Marysville, was celebrated last evening in the Marysville Methodist church, when at 7.30 o'clock Miss Annie Maude Foster, daughter of Mr G. W. Foster, of Marysville, was united in marriage to Mr. George Abram Burback of Pittfield Mass. The church was prettily decorated with cut flowers and potted plants, while ribbons entwined with smilax hung in garlands from the pillars. Twelve little girls dressed in white, strewed the bridal path with flowers and divided of the aisle of the church with white ribbons. As the bride party entered the church, preceded by the little maid of honor, the organ pealed forth a wedding march.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was handsomely gowned in ivory duchesse satin with trimmings of chiffon and pearls, bridal veil and orange blossom, and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses. The bride wore a magnificent brooch set with sixty-four diamonds, the gift of the groom. She was attended by Miss Clara Milliken, as bridesmaid, who was prettily gowned in white organdie over pink silk, with lace applique trimmings, and carried a bouquet of pink and white roses. The little maid of honor was Miss Bessie Robinson, niece of the bride; she was daintily dressed in pink silk with velvet baby ribbons, and carried a beautiful basket of pink roses.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Brewer, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Lawson. The groom had the support of Mr F. W. Smith, brother of the bride. Mr Frank I. Robinson, Mr Fred Murray and Mr W. MacPherson were ushers.

After the ceremony the bridal party and guests drove to the home of the bride's father, where a reception was held from eight till ten. The home was beautifully decorated with cut flowers and ferns, the Union Jack and stars and stripes prettily entwined, covered every available space of wall in the entrance hall and double parlors, and made a very effective decoration. Winter's orchestra was present and added much to the enjoyment of the evening. A very dainty collation was served soon after nine o'clock. The newly wedded pair drove to the city last evening and remained at "The Queen," taking the early morning train for Boston.

The bride's going gown was of fawn broadcloth over a lining of turquoise blue silk, with white applique insertion embroidered in chenille and velvet. She wore a hat of brown velvet with embossed blue velvet and chiffon and pleasant breast fasteners. The wedding journey will include a visit to the Pacific Coast and they will be absent several months. The bridal presents were costly and beautiful. The groom's present to his bride was a sunburst pin set in sixty-four diamonds, to the bridesmaid he gave a pearl sunburst with diamond centre and to the little maid of honor a diamond ring. To the groomsmen a diamond pin. The bride's present to the groom was a watch charm with a head and diamond eyes, representing the order of elks and Oddfellows.

Napoleon's Estimate.
When Napoleon was waiting in exile, for his rapidly approaching death, he is said to have uttered the following opinions on the earthly virtues and the heavenly, as they have appeared in history. He said: I have been accustomed to put before me the examples of the Alexander and Caesar, with the hope of rivaling their exploits and living in the lives of men forever. Yet after all, in what sense do Caesar and Alexander live? Who knows or cares any thing about them? Even their names do but lit up and down the world like ghosts mentioned only on particular occasions or from accidental associations.

Their chief home is in the schoolroom; they have a foremost place in boy's grammars and exercise books; they are splendid examples for themes; they form writing copies. So low is Alexander fallen, so low is imperial Caesar.

But on the contrary, there is just one name in the whole world that lives. It is the name of One Who passed His years in obscurity, and Who died a malefactor's death. Eighteen hundred years have gone since that time, but still that name has its hold upon the human mind. It has possessed the world, and it maintains possession.

Here, then, is One Who is not a mere name. He is dead and gone, but still He lives in the energetic thought of successive generations, and as the awful motive power of a thousand great events. Jesus Christ has done without effort what others with lifelong heroic struggles have not done. Can He be less than divine?

Two Lawyers.
Our grandfathers remember "Clay and Frelinghuysen," who represented the Whigs in the Presidential election of 1844. Theodore Frelinghuysen, the candidate for the Vice Presidency, was a lawyer of New Jersey in large practice, and every Jerseyman, whether Wig or Democrat thoroughly believed any word that this advocate uttered. This blind faith was due to long and intimate knowledge of the man.

Frelinghuysen's character awed them. To them he was as sincere as the atmosphere about a mountain's top, and as faithful as the moral law. When he, as counsel, said that the evidence proved the fact, and that the law gave the fact legal vitality, it was useless for counsel on the opposite side to contradict the statement, or for the court itself to charge against Frelinghuysen's affirmation. The jury's verdict showed that they stood by Frelinghuysen's every time.

This success was not due to the advocate's eloquence, for he was not an orator. But he was an honest man, who had the art of so stating his opinions that ordinary jurors said: "Yes, that's so! That seems reasonable! We guess that's about it! There's no answering that!"

Theodore Frelinghuysen's influence over Jersey jurors recalls the power wielded by the late Herr Lasker, the eloquent advocate of Berlin, and the formidable antagonist of Bismarck. Herr Lasker was a Jew so permeated with the righteousness of the Old Testament that he would not accept a case unless convinced that it was supported by justice.

He was indifferent to the fee. It might be thousands of thalers; but if it was tendered in support of an unjust cause, it was declined.

When Herr Lasker stood up before a Berlin jury, they knew that he had faith in his cause. They listened to him with open minds, confident that he would state the facts as if he were a witness, sworn to tell 'the truth the whole truth and nothing but the truth.'

It was said of Daniel Webster: "His statement of a case was an argument." But of Herr Lasker it might have been said: "His statement was the mental effort of a man anxious to let the jury see what had convinced him that his cause was just."

Frelinghuysen was of Dutch descent, and an elder of that Reformed church which insists that the fathers should not forget the children, and that the children should remember the fathers. His morality was that of those Dutchmen who stood by William the Silent, and died to make it possible for a man to live up to his convictions.

"Joe"
A good many years ago a cheap traveling show came to the town of Scranton, Pennsylvania. Among the performers was a drunken negro named Joe, whose business was to dance on broken glass and burning coals, singing, howling and turning hand springs. No lower type of man apparently could be found.

But one stormy night, when the attendance at the show was small, somebody took him, drunk as he was, to a quiet room and there talked to him, and one or two other outcasts, of their wasted lives, and of Christ, Who could save them.

Joe was sobered and awed. He listened in silence, and the next morning gave up his place in the show. Coming back to the little mission house, he begged humbly for a chance to lead a different life.

It was given to him. His friend set him to work. He proved to be a quick-witted fellow, earnest, affectionate and always merry. He could read and write, and so anxious was to do work for Christ in the world that he was sent to Mr. Moody's training school in Chicago.

His grandfather had come from the Congo, and Joe had learned the tongue of his people in his childhood. He asked to be sent to the country of his ancestors to work for God. He has been in the heart of Africa for many years, sent by the Southern Presbyterian church, to help civilize and Christianize the natives.

Another worker in the same field, a man distinguished for his learning and eloquence, says of him: "He is remarkable for his business ability and in tropical agriculture is a past master. No one is more successful in teaching habits of civilized life to the natives. He has wonderful self control. I never have seen him lose his temper. His faith is the simplest and sincerest I have ever known."

What if, on that stormy night in Scranton, that nameless somebody who saw the poor drunken black clown had turned away with the thought that he was not worth saving?
