

A great many people, who have been summering at Westfield, Woodman's Point, Robbsey and other equally pretty (if not quite so fashionable) spots along the line and river, have returned to town within the last week or two.

Since the beginning of September, the evenings and in fact the days, have become too chilly to indulge in summer pastimes, such as bathing, boating, &c., and long and instructive walks through the woods in search of crimson and golden tinted maple leaves has been the chief amusement.

But even this, no matter how pretty and poetic it may be, soon grows tiresome and every incoming steamer and train bring our suburbanites huddling back to the city, ready and eager to begin a round of winter festivities.
