A Flying Leap

The squirrel's boldness in leaping from tree to tree is explained by Mr. G. H. Heirhold as the result of the animal's knowledge that a fall will not hurt him. Every species of tree squirrel seems capable of a sort of rudimentary flying or at least of making itself into a parachute so as to break a fall.

'One day,' says Mr. Heirhold, 'my dog treed a red squirrel in a tall hickory that stood on the side of a steep hill. To see what the squirrel would do when closely pressed, I climbed the tree. He took refuge in the topmost branches, and then, as I approached, boldly leaped into the air, spread himself upon it, and with a quick, tremulous motion of his tail and legs descended quite slowly, and landed upon the ground thirty feet below me, apparently none the worse for the leap, for he ran with great speed and escaped up another tree.'

A traveller in Mexico gives a still more striking instance of the power of squirrels partially to neutralize the effect of the force of gravity when leaping through the air.

Some boys had caught a black squirrel nearly as large as a cat. It had escaped from them once by leaping sixty feet from the top of a pine-tree, and this had led the grandmother of one of the boys to declare that the creature was bewitched. To test the matter, the boys wanted to throw the squirrel down a precipice six hundred feet deep.

Our traveller interferred to secure fair play for the squirrel. The prisoner was conveyed in a pillow-case to the edge of the cliff, and then let out, that he might take his choice between captivity and the terrible leap.

He looked down the abyss, and then backward and sideways, his eyes glistening, his form crouching. Seeing no escape except in front, he took a flying leap into space, and fluttered, rather than fell, into the abyss below. His legs began to work like those of a swimming poodle dog but faster and faster, while his tail, slightly elevated, spread out like a feather fan.

He landed on a ledge of limestone where he could be seen squatting on his hind legs and smoothing his ruffled fur, after which he made for the creek with a flourish of his tail, took a good drink, and scampered away into the willow thicket. He deserved his freedom.

Ella—I hope my minister won't see me out riding in this automobile this Sunday morning.

Stella—Why do you call him your minister? Do you attend his church?

Ella—No; but he always marries me.

SUNBURN AND FRECKLES.

Effective Treatment for the Farmer While the Latter Should be Left Alone.

Both of these affections are caused by the action of the sun's rays, but why one person tans while another freckles is not easy of explanation. Both affections are said to be caused chiefly by the chemical or ultra-violet rays, but in the case of sunburn it is probable that the heat also has some effect.

The tan may come gradually, without any burn, after a succession of slight and brief exposures to the sun or to high winds—for wind will tan as well as sunshine. Usually, however, the city-dweller gets well burned during the first few days of his vacation in the country or on the water.

In severe cases the skin is red slightly swollen, and the seat of a sharp, burning sensation; if the exposure has been prolonged, or the glare of the sun very intense, it may even be blistered. After a few days the soreness and heat subside, and the red color gradually turns to brown.

If the burn is pretty severe, cooling lotions, such as alcohol and water, diluted cologne water, a solution of bicarbonate of soda, or lead water, may be applied or the skin may be smeared with cold cream, camphor ice, zinc ointment, or a mixture of lime water and oil. Some such application as this, the sufferer being careful to keep out of the sun for a day or two, will usually suffice.

If blisters form, they should be pricked with a clean needle at the most dependent part, and when the water has drained away they should be covered with a cloth spread with one of the greasy applications just mentioned.

Freckles occur usually on persons of a sandy complexion, especially those with red hair. They are not common in very young children, under six or eight years of age, or in persons of middle or advanced life. They usually come the first time in summer and are less marked, or even disappear, in winter. Persons who freckle do not tan as a rule.

Freckles, like sunburn, may be prevented by the wearing of a veil, perfectly red or brown. Medical books sometimes speak of removing freckles by electricity, or by touching each one with a drop of carbolic acid on a glass rod, but such severe remedies are worse than the disease. The spots will fade out more or less completely in the winter, and will disappear wholly in time. In any case they are not particularly disfiguring.

Frightened.

It was in the kitchen of a small flat. The occupants were a little girl of three years of age, and her loving mother and doting grandmother who were engaged in an animated conversation. Suddenly the grandmother discovered that the teakettle was steaming away, and needed replenishing from the hydrant. The Chicago Record gives the story as follows:

She took the kettle from the stove, but had hardly taken two steps when she collided with the child. There were two almost simultaneous shrieks, and then the mother, uttering a third one, darted forward and caught the cherub in her arms, her frantic exclamations mingling with the agonized wail of the child and the hysterical sobs of the grandmother.

In about two minutes the child's face was covered with layers of sweet oil, white of egg, sanitary cotton and flour, and the grandmother was speeding round the corner on the way to the family doctor's.

The doctor came and removed the layers of emollients. Then he laughed heartily, and asked the woman why they had called him.

"There is nothing the matter with the child's face," he said.

"It must be her arms and shoulders," said the mother. "Tell mother where you are hurt, darling?"

"I ain't hurt," said the child, "but grandma screamed so she scared me."

Well, John Henry Bingle, what have you to say for yourself?

I'll let you say it for me, my dear.
