LITERATURE AND WHISEY. Peculiar Complaints Made by a Capadian

A singular complaint comes from a Canadian author. Mr. Arthur Barr, writing in the Cansdian Magazine, expresses his belief that Canada ought to be the Scotland of America. 'The bald truth is,' says Mr. Barr, 'that Canada has the money, but would rather spend it on whiskey than on books.'

This is a serious charge. But does it not involve rather sweeping conclusion? May not a country produce whiskey and literature simultaneously?

Mr. Barr compares Canada with Scotland. Is not the production of whiskey another parallel ?

No one can deny that Scotch whiskey bas a reputation coextensive with the world. Has this reputation been obtained at the expensive of literature? There is no good ground for such a supposition. The 2 have gone on conquering with equal step. Scottieh literature is full of whiskey.

Indeed, the Scottish poets of the last century were quite too fond of it.

Tannabill and Ferguson were devoted to the joys of the bottle, and died young in consequence.

Burns was an expert in whiskey before be became an exciseman. The verses ef these men celebrate in glowing terms the charms of the flowing bowl.

Even in later literature whiskey vies with heather as an attraction. Wm. Black was a most respectable gentleman. But in his novels pipes and whickey are always brought out. Shella herself, the magic princess of the North, set forth the glasses every evening for old Maskerzie and Frank Lavender. And who can bring down a deer or land a salmon without whiskey? The thing is unthinkable. It whiskey could be taken out of Scottish literature very litle would be left.

Mr. Crockett is as everyone knows a highly moral writer.

But even Mr. Crockett is not guiltless of allusions to the national drink. The author of 'Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush,' tco, recognizes the pathoes of the bottle. Nor does Mr. Barrie banish potations from the village of Torums. No, indeed; Scottish literature without whiskey would be a barren affair. There must be some more recondite resson. It is unnecessary to attempt to discover what it is. Canada may not sup port authors, but it certainly produces them. And it would not do so if whickey ane literature wore reall antagonistic.

A Few Mitakes.

People do not often make the mistake of giving too much. A certain lady who not long ago entered a Glasgow church was an exception to the rule, at least she thought so. She passed the collection box at the door and dropped in sixpence. Then she took her seat in the church and waited until the preacher appeared. To her disappointment the efficiating minister was not the Doctor H whom she had come to hear On inquiry the found the bad entered the wrong church. It was not yet too late to hear the preacher of her choice, but the sixpence was another matter. To leave it in the box would be clear loss. The lady was equal to the occasion. Slowly descending the gallery stairs she requested her sixpence back, and received it from the efficiating elder. More to be excused was the shomaker's apprentince of whom Christain Work tells. He possessed but a penry and a florin, and while in attendance at a country church dropped the florin in o the plate in mistake for the penny. Finding his mistake, he rose, left the pew deliberately fished out his silver piece, and put in the copper coin instead. A student attending an Edinburgh church put a balfcrown into the plate by mistake, and the elder stoutly refused to give it back. He was determined to be even with that elder, however. For thirty Sundays he attended the church and persistently allow d the plate to pass him. Then he was content. At a penny a Sunday the account was now even between him and the elder. Perhaps the thirty sermons did bim li tle good, although they cost him but a penny apiece.

Most Respectful.

Among the stories told of Charles Lever, the witty novelist, is one which concerns the days when he was British consul at Trieste. He had accompanied his daughter to London for a little social enjoyment, and had neglected to go through the formality of asking for a leave of absence. On his arrival in London he was invited to dinner by Lord Lytton, who was delighted to see him. When he arrived at Lord Lytton's house, his host said, 'I'm so glad you could come! You will meet your chief, Clarendon'-the minister of foreign began to give reasons why be must tear himself away, but before he could make his escape, Lord Clarendon was announced and almost at once espied him.

'Ah, Mr. Lever,' he said, blandly, 'I didn't know you were in England; in fact for!leave from Trieste.'

'No-o, my lord,' stammered the novelist, disconcerted for a second, but no more then that: 'no, my lord; I thought it would be more respectful to your lordship for me to come and sek for it in person!

FIGHTER AND PREACHER.

Ex-Champion Fitz immon's Irtreduction to the Late Evangelist Moody.

When Bob Fitzsimmons arrived in Chicago fresh from his victory nver Jim Corbett in Carson City, 1897, he stayed at the Auditorium hotel, and there met the late D. L. Moody for the first and last time. Fitzsimmons was the guest of a well known race horse owner, and he, with a party of men, was talking over thn fight with Corbett, when a sudden burst of music came in through the theatre door leading to the ballway of tha Auditorium.

What's the doing ?' asked the prizeflahter.

'Moody is holding services, and he's right,' responded one of the party. 'I would like to meet that chap, as bave heard a lot about him,' said Fitz-

A few mements later the prize fighter and his frierds were walking down through the corridor of the hotel when Mr. Moody came hurrying in from Michigan ave on his way to the service.

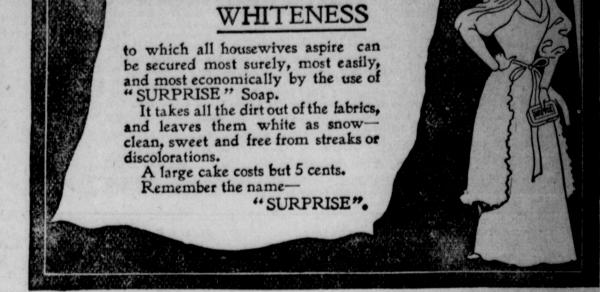

'That's the big preacher,' said one of the party. Mr. Moody halted for a moment on hearing this remark and smiled in a pleasant manner. Promptly the horse owner led the prize-fighter up to the famous evangelist and said: 'Mr. Moody, this is Mr. Fi'zsimmons, who has just whipped Jim Corbett out west, and he wanted to meet you.'

'Mr. Fitzimmons, how are you, si?' said the evangelist. 'I hope we shall see you at the meeting. We are baving rous ing good times. Come in, gentlemen, I believe you would erjoy it.' And, with a wave of his hand, Mr. Moody was off down the hall, leaving the prize fighter and his friends looking perplexed.

'Well, he sin't half bad, is he?' remarked the Cornishman. 'Let's call his bluff and go in,' Forthwith the party entered the theatre and occupied seats in the rear of a box. All bnt Fitzzimmons seemed to weary of the sermon, but he stayed until the last. A day later he again met Mr. Moody in affairs. The novelist, much embarassed, the hotel, and, interrupting the latter while he was talking to a party of friends, he said: 'I was with you yesterday, and I enjoved the talk,' and Bob, like a blushing school-girl, hurried away.
