A Reputation In the Making.

The opportunities for a young man to rise, by virtue of his own qualities, with little or no outside help, are so numerous in the United States, says the Youth's Companion that it is sometimes assumed that similar conditions do not exist anywhere else. Perhaps they do not to the same extent, yet wherever there are free institutions and a parliamentary form of government, there is room in public life for young men of energy and real ability.
In the recent debate in the British House of Commons upon the army bill, the speech which attracted the most notice in and out of Parliament, was made by a young man of twenty-six. It may be said that, as the son of his father, Lord Randolph Churchill—who was an exceptionally brilliant man—Mr. Winston Churchill had an advantage which a young man of less conspicuous parentage would not have enjoyed.
Nevertheless it was not as the son of the father, but as a young man who had developed vigorous powers of his own as a writer and war correspondent, and who had kept his head in South Africa where so many other ambitious men, young and old, had lost theirs, that Mr. Churchill won his election to the House of Commons, and an attentive hearing when he rose to make his first speech. He spoke with such force and freshness, and with such courage—for he criticized boldly a cherished measure of his own party—that he won applause even from those who differed from him.
Here is an instance of a reputation in the making. Mr. Churchill has only to go on as he has begun, to gather strength and ripeness with experience, and to keep himself from being spoiled, and his career is secure.

It was in a similar way that Mr. Gladstone made his mark. Lord Salisbury earned his own living as a newspaper writer before he became conspicuous in public life. Sir William Harcourt made his way in the law before he rose to political leadership; and scores of other brilliant careers in England point the same lesson, that to the young man who possesses real talents, energy and courage, the world's highest prizes of usefulness and power are open.

1,468,000 Miles in a Locomotive.

It has been claimed that a locomotive engineer could not live through more than a million miles of riding on a locomotive. remarked Washington Snow as he mopped the perspiration from his brow and helped himself to a seat in front of the Hotel David son yesterday afternoon I reckon I can beat the million mile racket by several hundred thousand," he continued. "I began working for the old La Crosse and Milwaukee Railway Company in 1857, and have been with that company and its successors and assigns, as the lawyers say, ever since. I began in the shops at Watertown, of course, but I have been running an engine on the road for the past thirty-eight years. I am way within bounds when I say I have travelled 36,000 miles a year. I have figured it out and am not guessing. Now if you multiply those figures by the number of years I have held the throttle, you will find that I have travelled 1,468,000 miles."

In appearance Mr. Snow is a typical locomotive engineer—one of those short, thickset men who fill out the smock in magnificent proportions, and carry about with them a ruddy, good-natured face. His home is in Portage, and he runs into Milwaukee.

A Strong Impression.

"Now, ma, you know I'm anxious to make an impression on those New York people. Bring me the coal oil can, I want to perfume my clothes."
"With coal oil! Mercy, child, what do you mean?"
"Why, I want people to think we own an automobile."

Melancholy Opinion.

"I see that the managers are now playing Shakespeare's works," said the casual observer.

"No," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes. "There's no art in it. They are merely working Shakespeare's plays."

Tom—I didn't know he had children.
Dick—Oh, yes, he must have one, and I suppose it's at least a year old.

Tom—Ah! you've seen the kid, then.
Dick—No, but when I was in his office yesterday I asked if he had any ice water and he said absent mindedly: "So 'im 'ants a jinky 'ater, does 'ims?"

In the Smoking Car.

"Here's a good one," said the man from Denver. "What's the difference between a pen and a pencil? Give it up. A pen has to be driven, but a pencil has to be lead. See?"

"The automatic bell buoy beats 'em both," murmured a quiet little chap who had got on at Cleveland. "It rights itself."

Annie Lloyd has been engaged as leading soubrette in The Telephone Girl.

Irene Perry is reported to have sued Tom B. Davis for alleged breach of contract in failing to cast her for a leading role in the production of the Silver Slipper in London.

Mary Mannering will star next season in Jeanette L'Gilder's near play the name of which is said to be Granstark.

Marie Dressler has filed a petition in bankruptcy, declaring her liabilities to be about $12,000 and assets of $12.

Charlotte Wilke, the Danish actress has made announcement of an American tour for next season.

Bianche Crazier is meeting with considerable success as Princess Flavia in The Prisoner of Zenda.

Selene Johnson who has been starring with James O'Neill has sailed for Europe, where she will spend the summer. She will not appear with the O'Neill Company next season.

The very latest thing now at matinees is the reception and tea which follows the Benjamin Howard has been engaged by Viola Allan for her next season's company. Ida Brassey of the Richard Mansfield company in Paris.

"The Scotchman expectorated feebly as though to clear his enunciation and then remarked with great mustering of his faculties, 'Posh. (hic Posh-tivly 'erect.'"

Just before the train started there was a shuffling at the door of the baggage car, and, holding hard to the iron railing on the rear platform the big Scotchman, with cap one side and jaw hanging nervously, swung himself through the door and stood, rocking backward and forward on his heels and toes in front of the astonished inspector. Three times he tried to speak and then he was heard to ejaculate, "Pose-tly sikreec. 'What's that?' gasped the inspector with amazement pictured on his countenance.
