'That is the way the buffalo wore it,' was the reply.

'But,' retorted the Quaker, 'the buffalo wore it with the hair side toward us.'

Pearline—Safe and Saving

The past week has been one of special gaiety. Many dances and at homes were given and thoroughly enjoyed by those present. One of the pleasantest being the dance given by Mrs. Keltie Jones. The ball room was converted into a perfect bower of flowers, long festoons of smilax adorning the walls, while the mantels were banked with ferns, palms, roses and carnations. The dining room, library, reception room and stairways were also beautifully decorated. A large number were present and many handsome costumes were worn. A long programme of dances were gone through for which Harrison's orchestra furnished music.

That St. John theatre-goers were glad to have the Baker Stock company with them was well shown by the crowded houses which were given them every night this week. The company will stay with us next week and many little private theatrical parties have been planned for.

The absence of snow has caused many a disappointed heart this week. The sleighing parties and coasting parties which were to take place having all been postponed.

The solos by Messrs Mayes and Titus were received with much applause. The vocalists were ably supported by their accompanist, Mrs. Mayes. The concert was one of the best ever given in the west end and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

Corticelli Skirt Protector should not be used as a binding—it is a physical impossibility for any kind of a binding to outwear a skirt.

Corticelli Protector Braid should be sewed on flat—not turned over—one or two rows of stitching—one at upper edge of braid and the second near the bottom of the skirt.

Put on thus it is a real "protector"—its perfect shade match makes a desirable bottom finish for any skirt.

The Bachelor's Degree.

The least sensational and most important topic discussed by Pres. Elliott of Harvard University, in his annual report, is the new rule that only college graduates can be admitted to the law, medical and theological departments.

The meaning of that new rule is immense. It is very new, having been brought into complete enforcement only within the past year. It means the longest stride which has been toward the general advancement of culture in this country since Harvard also led the way in the adoption of the system of elective studies. All the other great colleges and universities will, sooner or later, follow suit in this movement, as they have done in that one. Where Harvard sets the pace, her would-be rivals must hasten to keep step.

How great the change is, and will be, by which a full course of college education is required for entrance into professional schools, can be seen by examining the catalogues of the most prominent law, medical and theological institutions of learning for the past 25 years. It will be found, indeed, that there has been a gradual improvement in this respect; but that, nevertheless, a considerable proportion of their students' had no college degrees. We think that most people would be absolutely amazed at discovering the truth. It is the common idea that 'the learned professions' are filled almost altogether by liberally educated men. They are filled with such to a very important extent; but if that can be said to be the rule, the exceptions are exceedingly numerous.

In New England the largest proportion of professional students having bachelor degrees, will be found in theological seminaries, the next largest in law schools, and the lowest in schools of medicine.

But it is to be said, in justice to the medical profession, that within recent years the most vigorous movement for raising the standard of general, as well as of professional, scholarship within the ranks of 'the learned professionals,' has come from physicians.

Pres. Eliot points out that the requirements at Harvard for the degree of A. B. are not so burdensome but that capable and diligent students can graduate in three years. The privilege of doing so is a great innovation; and there is reason to think that an increasing number of students will avail themselves of it, being spurred on in many cases by the lengthening of the course required in post-graduate departments. It ought not to be said, but perhaps it does need to be, that the privilege of earning the A. B. degree in three years has not been provided by any letting down, whatsoever, of the standard of scholarship, either in quantity or in quality.
