

Court of Apollo.

From Harlequin's Almande,
(A NEW PANTOMIME.)

THE GREENWICH PENSIONER.
A sailor I was born and bred,
My father's name was Midship Ned,
I does't tell a story;
And when he died, says Mam, says she,
"Suppose, my lad, you goes to sea."
Says I, "that there's all one to me, It's all for Britain's glory."

I learnt to splice, and reef, and clue,
To drink my grog till all was blue,
And tell a merry story;
And tho' I was't very big,
Aloft I'd climb, nor care a fig,
Or load a gun, or dance a jig,
And all for Britain's glory.

When I came home again, I found,
My mother, she was left aground,
I doesn't tell a story;
For she was cheated by an elf,
Who married her for father's pelf,
Then spent the cash, and hung himself,
And all for Britain's glory.

I fought the Spanish, French, and Dutch,
You know it does't matter much,
To tell a tedious story;
While mother liv'd why I kept she,
And, now I cannot go to sea,
The King, God blefs him, he keeps me,
And all for Britain's glory.

The cause tried lately at York, where a lady was said to have persuaded her lover to accompany her to Gretna Green, is the more extraordinary as this is NOT LEAF YEAR. A case somewhat similar occurred several years ago:
a young gentleman went to consult Serjeant Maynard (author of a book entitled Law Quibbles) how he might safely carry off an heiress. "You cannot do it at all with safety," said the Serjeant, "but I'll tell you what you may do;—let her mount a horse, and hold the bridle and whip; do you then mount behind her, and you are safe,
FOR SHE RUNS AWAY WITH YOU."
The Serjeant was however sufficiently punished for his quibbling advice, when next day he found it was his own daughter that had run away with his client. (London Pap.)

DREAMS,

(From a French Paper.)

A Poet of the day dreamed that he had written an excellent Comedy, and that Sylphs had administered incense to him in salvers of gold. He said to himself, "I have driven Moliere from the stage!" He awoke amidst the hisses of the pit.

A Parisian husband fell asleep on the pillow of Hymen. He dreamed that his wife was faithful and constant.—He was awaked by an officer, who informed him, that his chaste Penelope had di-vored him, and that she was about to marry his valet.

A coachman fell asleep upon the coach-box, and awakened upon a chair of state. Every body congratulated him on having awakened to so much good fortune; and the coachman would not believe that he had been asleep.

A washerwoman, in the Rue St. Ho-nore, while asleep, fell from the fourth story of a house into an English curricle, and received no injury.

A lacquey fell asleep behind a carriage, and when he awoke, he was in the inside of it!—Numbers have lately fallen asleep in a garret, and awakened in a drawing room!

A fellow walking through the Old Bailey, a few weeks ago, at the time of an execution, when an Irishman, with whom he had some acquaintance, was on the point of being turned off, inhumanly enough, bawled out, Ah! you are there, are you? I always said that you would come to be hanged!—"You're a d—d liar!" replied Pat, indignantly,
"if it is the last word I say, 'I did not come! I was brought, you scoundrel, and so will you, before you are much older.'"
