CAUTION.

ALL Persons concerned are hereby cautioned against the purchase of ANDREW THOMPSON & Co's. Bills of Exchange, dated Newfoundland, August 3d, 1802, in favor of John Cock, (late Master of my vessel) for the payment of Two hundred and six pounds twelve shillings and three pence Sterling, drawn on THOMPSON, STILL & Co. at six Months. Those Bills were received in payment for a Cargo of Lumber, Shipped by me, and Cock's name inserted in the Bills contrary to my express orders, and now detained by him as well as 1274 1/2 Guilders unaccounted for in a voyage to Demarara. I have therefore requested THOMPSON STILL & Co. not to pay those Bills until they may hear further from me on the subject of them. N. FRINK.
St. Andrews, 20th September, 1802.

MR. RYAN,
THERE having appeared in your Gazette of the 22d ult. a Caution under the signature of Nathan Frink, relating to certain Bills of Exchange drawn by Andrew Thompson & Co. on Thompson, Still & Co. and said to be drawn in my name, contrary to his (Nathan Frink's) express orders, and detained by me, as well as 1274 1/2 Guilders unaccounted for, in a voyage to Demarara.

As the whole of the above Caution, Sir, is a base fabrication, calculated to injure my character, as well as to answer some other of Capt. Frink's private ends, it will be necessary that I inform you, with respect to the Bill, that Mr. Andrew Thompson & Co. absolutely refused to draw in favour of any one but the person with whom he transacted the business, and that the Bill would never have been detained from Capt. Frink a single instant, had he been willing to come to that fair and equitable settlement I had a right to expect.

The 1274 1/2 Guilders which he says are unaccounted for, are the amount of three notes, left with Mr. Abijah Sherman of St. Andrews, to collect, with orders to remit the same to him as soon as collected, and for which I produced him Mr. Sherman's receipt.

Upon a fair statement of the Accounts between him and me (part of which was settled by Arbitration) there is a balance due from me of £ 107 : 14 : 5 1/2 and which was tendered him by my Attorney, in a Bill at 8 days Sight on HUGH JOHNSTON, Esquire, of this City, and indorsed by Daniel Grant, which he refused to accept.

It has always been my earnest wish to settle with Capt. Frink, agreeable to the strictest honor and justice, and which might have been easily accomplished, the Accounts being perfectly clear, had he not unfortunately been possessed with that litigious spirit which always has led him as it now does, to fish in troubled water.

I am, Sir,
Your's, &c.
JOHN COCK.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

GIBRALTAR, June 10.

His Royal Highness, the new Governor, maintains a great spirit of discipline amongst the garrison, and keeps the troops in constant exercise. He is himself indefatigable in his superintendance, and every morning appears on the parade at six o'clock, directing the manoeuvres, and particularly requiring precision from the officers.—The superior discipline and Tenue of the English troops daily attract numbers of the Spanish officers from San Roque and Algeiras, to view the relief of guard, which can fluently afford them a good lesson of military evolution. Since the Duke's arrival, the soldiers' time is fully occupied in the daily muster and exercise, and keeping their drefs and accoutrements in perfect order, by means of which the garrison appears remarkably neat and to advantage. During the indisposition of the late Governor, the military, being called upon for active service, used to stroll about more, whilst others who gained some money by working in the merchants' stores, had frequent opportunities of indulging in drink, and some occasional little riotous acts would ensue. Nothing of the kind is to be seen now; they are forbid to do any other than military service, and indeed, from its frequency, have no spare time to attend to other pursuits. The garrison at present consists of the 1st, or Royal regiment, the 2d, or Queen's, the 5th, 8th, and 54th regiments of Foot, all, except the 54th, returned from Egypt, where the active service they have seen has given them all, though mostly young men, the appearance of hardy veterans. Other troops are daily expected from Minorca; the wind having been lately much from the eastward, the whole stores and transports from the evacuation of that Island are looked for. Two vessels with ordnance on board are just come in.

The anniversary of his Majesty's Birth-day was celebrated here on Friday last with becoming eclat; a Review was held in the parade-ground, in presence of many thousand spectators, who dispersed all over the shelves of the Rock, which look down upon the spacious ground and on the charming Bay, which washes the foot of it, and presented a most grand and picturesque spectacle. A feu-de-joye was fired, and the artillery of the batteries, with a royal salute from Lord Keith's fleet at anchor in the Bay, concluded the celebration of the morning. An American and a Danish frigate, likewise riding in the Bay, returned with becoming etiquette the compliment of the royal salute to the Admiral, as did a Portuguese 74 gun man of war and a frigate which were then here. The two latter sailed since for Lisbon, leaving only two armed brigs of that nation at Gibraltar, and another frigate cruising in the Offing.

The circumstance of a large Portuguese frigate, being taken about three weeks ago by the Algerines, will probably be known ere now; it was much doubted for a time till the arrival of the Danish Commodore, who reported that he saw her taken into Algiers, by a xebecque of 22 guns, which, after a short conflict, ran along side, grappled, and carried her by boarding. The frigate was commanded by a French emigrant, who, with his Lieutenant, was killed early in the action; and it is said, that the sailors, after the terror inspired by this first loss, were so discouraged as to suffer themselves to fall an easy prey to the ferocious Algerines, though aware of the hard fate which awaited them. A report was likewise spread, that the Barbarians had declared war against the Spaniards, but it does not seem to be authentic. They are on the point of a rupture, with the Danes, and fled by some rich presents from Copenhagen at the end of July, the armistice expires which was entered into for three months, between the Bey and the Commodore. A squadron of four American frigates continues blocking up the port of Tunis, where the Bey will not amicably adjust the misunderstanding. Two other American frigates are here, one of which is undergoing some repairs, and getting a new main-mast; when completed they are expected to sail in company, to reinforce the blockading squadron, and compel the Bey, by an open attack, to renounce his system of hostility. In the States of Morocco they are all quiet, and at amity with every nation at present.

The Duke of Sussex, who arrived here about a fortnight since on a visit to his Royal Brother, is shortly going to return to Lisbon. He sailed on Tuesday with Lord Keith in a frigate to pay a visit to the Governor of Ceuta, and take a view of the African coast; last night they returned to the garrison, highly pleased with the excursion. His Lordship is soon expected to sail for England with most of the fleet now here, when the command will devolve on Sir James Saumarez, who is daily expected from Minorca.

The Duke of Kent's baggage and furniture, with eight fine horses, arrived safe here on Monday in a merchant brig from London. The Convent, where his Royal Highness resides, is undergoing some repairs and enlargements, more necessary for the establishment of his household than his own, he being distinguished for particular moderation and abstemious way of living, as well as unremitting diligence in the concerns of his government. The Spanish Commanders pay frequent visits to the Convent, and multitudes of natives from the other side of the Bay are daily flocking into the town; but the inhabitants of Gibraltar find much more difficulty in exploring the opposite shore. No person is suffered to pass the outer guard without a permit from the Lieutenant-Governor; and many bastions and parts of the fortifications which were open to the public in General O'Hara's time, cannot now be explored without a particular licence. The curious galleries cut out of the solid rock, making the most tremendous batteries towards the Isthmus of the peninsula, are continually increasing; and if Gibraltar, before the memorable siege, was so grand a fortress as to resist the stupendous attack it endured, it is now so wonderfully and so impregably improved in strength, as to defy the efforts of the whole universe. The greatest curiosity is an aperture cut in the point of the Rock, commanding a sweep all round from this point of the Bay across the Spanish territory into the Mediterranean, in which 12 long 36-pounders, sweeping all round this immense circuit, can be directed upon any point of attack from within the bowels of the Rock, at a height of about 250 feet. This is called St. George's Hall. Another Hall, hewn out in the same way, and little inferior in strength, is called Willis's Hall, and placed in an opposite point of the Rock. The rest of the galleries resemble, by the labour and ingenuity of workmanship the famous Catacombs of the Romans, whose entrance is under the basilick of St. Paul's without the gates of Rome.

Towards the Old Mole, where all the merchant vessels lay, works are carrying on, and additional batteries constructing outside the parallel of the old town fortifications; underneath the bastions many compact barracks are established, which being bomb-proof, would, in case of a siege, afford excellent accommodation for the garrison. In fact, such improvements have been made, that the place seems to be out of the reach of all attack; and the circumstance of its not having been attacked during the whole course of the last war,
