

BOSTON, AUGUST 24.
THE ARMISTICE.

LANGSINGBURGH, AUGUST 18, 1812.—The suspension of arms mentioned in our last to have been concluded between Adjutant General Baynes and General Dearborn, is confirmed. Its duration, however, was not fixed. This was hereafter to be determined, should the armistice be approved by the President of the United States. But in any case, four days notice is to be given of the renewal of hostilities, at the several posts under Gen. Dearborn's command. Gen. Hull is not included in the armistice. It is understood that he refused the office of Brigadier-General, unless he could hold his command independent of Dearborn, and receive his orders directly from the Secretary of War. [Langsingburgh Gaz.]

The N. York Gazette of the 20th, stated, on the authority of a letter from Washington, "that the President had ratified the armistice, for sixty days." How far this is correct, we cannot say, as we know not the authority on which it rests; but it should be observed, that neither the Intelligencer of the 18th, nor the Alexandria Gazette of the 19th, which must be of later date than the above letter, make any mention whatever of the subject.

COMMUNICATION.

The Editor of the National Intelligencer of the 18th, has set all decency and sense of propriety at defiance, in his remarks on Federal newspapers and federal republicans, particularly those of New-England, and I hope some abler writer will expose the sophistry, and treat with becoming severity the exuberant ravings of this prince of Democracy. And who is this man, who thus stands forth the champion of proscription and tyranny, who calls the patriots of New-England, those who are best acquainted with, and advocated the true interests of the Country—those who have always been the supporters of political Orthodoxy, "new federal jacobins leagued with old British Tories." Who is this fellow who dares to brand the Federal Republicans with the vilest epithets, who calls them disorganizers, demagogues, and liars! who himself advocates mobs, or apologizes for them when they are destroying, with tyger-like ferocity, their fellow citizens, who may happen to differ in their political tenets from the supporters of the Administration—who denounces our legal meetings, to express, in a constitutional way, our sufferings, our wishes, and our opinions upon public affairs—who boldly threatens to treat the majority of the New-England States, as foes; and in the same manner as the declared enemies of the United States! I say who is this miscreant, who is thus filling up the measure of his political iniquity?—Oh! I blush for my country, and blush still deeper for my degraded government.—To say this arch-leader of the ruling party, who is the mouth piece of the executive, and who enjoys the fullest confidence of our imbecile administration, is an English Renegade—a Yorkshire man, who is a traitor to his own Country, and a Judas, who would betray ours for thirty pieces of silver.

The Intelligencer of Thursday last furnishes us with two columns of very interesting matter. We have now a new inducement to exert our powers—we see, by the feeling displayed in this paper, that Mr. Madison begins to be alarmed—he finds the opposition grow serious; and he begins to fear he must abandon Bonaparte, and make a peace with Old England, or he will be unhorsed by the patriots of New England who are not yet, and never expect to be, ready for an alliance with Bonaparte.

The "Virginia Cabal" is in alarm—The Dynasty is in danger—Clinton may be elected—The hopes of Madison, of Munroe, and of Epes, are blasted, unless the friends of peace are soothed—Already we see an armistice of 60 days, and soon we may see negotiations proposed—a sham negotiation, only intended to allay the fears of the friends of peace and commerce, till Madison is re-elected—and when Madison is again secure of four years reign, he may call on Bonaparte for the means of giving perpetuity to the Dynasty of the "Virginia Cabal."

Let the friends of peace be on their guard against the wiles of the Jeffersonian policy.

PORTLAND, AUGUST 24.

Proposed suspension of hostilities by sea.

The Boston Centinel of Wednesday last, states that Admiral Sawyer had written to the Secretary of War of the United States by the Gleaner, communicating the repeal of the Orders in Council, and that if the U. States wished it, he would agree to a suspension of hostilities and withdraw his squadron now on our coast, until the repeal was officially known.

As the Orders in Council are alleged to have been the principal cause of going to war, and as there cannot now be a question but these Orders are revoked, it is hoped that the President will avail himself of the pacific disposition of the British Government, speedily to open a negotiation for the restoration of an honorable peace and a return of our former prosperity.
