

the citizens of the Eastern States, would do credit to his heart at least; if it could be supposed he was influenced by a sincere detestation and abhorrence of unjust practices of that nature. But when we consider the whole of his public conduct, particularly in relation to Great-Britain immediately before and since the declaration of War, we cannot resist the belief that this Message is another state farce, got up to excite new animation to a dying cause, for the benefit of Virginia, North-Carolina and Tennessee patriots, at their approaching election of Members of Congress, and also to make palatable the measure proposed by him and probably adopted by Congress of interdicting the whole foreign trade of the United States. This measure, the principal, perhaps the sole object of the War in the view of the cabinet could not be forced down the throats even of the southern war men, without the aid of plots, treason and conspiracies. It is a second edition of the "Henry Plot," which came out just at this time the last year; three or four weeks before the Massachusetts election, which probably is also within "the scope of the President's policy." Mr. MADISON, it would seem, by his Message, has all at once become devout; for he calls upon all the "Christian" world to join him in denouncing the horrible design of the British, to spare some portion of his country from some of the horrors of war.

Because the British government chuses to blockade the Southern ports, and is willing to give licences to vessels from ports not blockaded, though with cargoes belonging to the Southern countries, forsooth they intend to make a league with the Eastern States, and separate their interest from their neighbours!—But Mr. MADISON says all this is demoralizing, unchristian and corrupt in Great-Britain, and every democrat in the country will say amen. And yet when we show to them that their idol has done the same thing in a worse form, even while the relations of peace existed with Great-Britain, and especially since the War commenced; they will all tell you that Mr. MADISON is the most moral, incorrupt and christian-like personage in the world. Look at his attempts to seduce the subjects, of Spain in Florida from their allegiance to a government with which he still professes to be at peace—and a government too, struggling for the maintenance of its independence against a wicked usurper.

Look at his private missions to Canada before the War, to tamper with the people of that country and persuade them to put themselves under the banners of liberty—And especially call to mind the proclamation of General Hull, no doubt directed or authorised by the government, and applauded in its papers—wherein all the arts of flattery and menace are used to induce the people of Upper-Canada to violate their oaths of allegiance; representing their government as tyrannical and oppressive, and holding out the blessings of American liberty to all who should commit "treason" against their lawful sovereign. Now after having set this example of seduction and held out such rewards to perfidy; how can Mr. MADISON escape the charge of hypocrisy when he affects so much horror at measures of the British government adopted probably in retaliation of the French mode of warfare pursued by himself.

It is astonishing that an imposition of this sort should be resorted to at this late day; when it is so well understood by the people that these Messages about plots and conspiracies are intended as a sort of "ruse de guerre," and are probably as little believed by those who write as by those who read them.—Well might Mr. MADISON exclaim, "Oh! for another Henry before the Massachusetts election—A Henry! A Henry! my kingdom, or 50,000 dollars for a Henry!"

FROM THE BOSTON CENTINEL MARCH 13. RUSSIAN TRIUMPHS.

On Thursday evening a meeting of citizens was held at the Exchange Coffee-House—the Hon. DANIEL SARGENT, in the chair—when it was voted unanimously to celebrate by a Public Festival the glorious and auspicious successes of the Russian Arms; and the Hon. Thomas H. Perkins, Peter C. Brooks, Daniel Sargent, Artemas Ward, Colonel John T. Apthorp, Benjamin Weld, William Sullivan, Nathaniel Goddard, and Isaac P. Davis, Esquires were appointed a Committee to make the necessary arrangements therefor.

A subscription paper was immediately opened—of which the following is the caption:—

Celebration of the Russian Successes.

Amidst the multiplied calamities in which our beloved country is involved, and the still more dreadful ones which appear to await us, from the unhappy war in which a small majority of our rulers has involved us, it is no ordinary consolation to reflecting men, who cherish a love of National Independence, and who perceive the connection between, the fate of other nations and our own, that it has pleased the Sovereign Disposer of Human Events, to raise up a noble and gallant Nation in the remotest parts of Europe, and by his Almighty Arm to enable them to "break the rod of the oppressor, and to scatter the nations which delight in war."

If our liberties had not been endangered by the alarming, increasing, and till now apparently irresistible power of France, with whom our administration had virtually entered into measures of co-operation, and whose views they were apparently promoting; still that sympathy which every free and generous mind must feel, and ought to cherish, would have stimulated us to rejoice at the successful struggle which the Russian People have made against a horde of ruthless and unprincipled invaders.

Connected, as we are, with Russia, by mutual commercial interests, and by the strictest ties of amity and friendship, we feel ourselves impelled by the most ardent feelings of sympathy and honor to testify openly our joy at her deliverance—our pious sense of the interposition of Divine Providence in her behalf—our admiration of her self-devotion, and our veneration of the gallantry, skill, perseverance, patriotism and talents of her leaders.

But viewing it, as we do, as the most important epoch in favor of Civil Liberty in the history of modern Europe, and as an event tending to the complete emancipation of the world, and especially as it is calculated to break the chains which have attached us to the politics and fate of France, and its ambitious and despotic Chief, and in this view affording to us the most rational hopes for that most desirable of all events, a speedy and lasting Peace:—

We, the undersigned, do agree to unite in a grateful and rational Festival on this glorious and auspicious event, and to invite the Consul of His Imperial Majesty of all the Russias, to participate with us upon the joyous occasion.
