

POETS CORNER.

WINTER—A FRAGMENT.

How painful to traverse the downs,
O'er spread with destruction and gloom!
Still dreading, O! Winter, thy frowns,
Still waiting their heavier doom!

For soon the tempest will blow,
The Storms will envelope the sky!
The Earth must be mantled with snow,
And nature must languish and die!

Yet why should I longer deplore,
Sweet landscapes, your annual decay,
Since Spring will your beauties restore,
And deck you in vernal array?

We mortals are fading like you!
Our Seasons are swift on the wing!
Our exit is hastening too!
May it usher unwithering Spring.

PRODIGY.

In Paris they shew an Infant Hercules, who is immensely fat. He is about 7 years and 10 months old, born near Joigny; his complexion is like that of a fat cook in a heat; black eyes and prominent eyebrows; three feet four inches in height, and four feet five inches in circumference; his legs and arms like those of a sturdy washer woman, and the hands and feet of an ordinary child of his own age; his body resembling the figure of a corpulent Chinese mandarin, and his weight 200 pounds.
