DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Boston, November 7.

On Tuesday evening at seven o'clock, fire was discovered near the south-west corner of the attic story of the Exchange Coffee-House, and before ten o'clock the whole of that magnificent, convenient and useful edifice, which was more than three years in building, was reduced to a melancholy heap of smoking ruins.

The fire, we are satisfied, was accidental, and occasioned by a defect in the chimney, leading from the kitchen. Being in the area of the Coffee-House, with many others, when the alarm was first given, and hastening to ascertain the cause of it, we found the attic room above-mentioned full of smoke, and immediately after saw the fire through fissures in the walls between that room and the roof. From its rage and extent, this fire must have been kindling for a considerable time within the walls and cornice of the house, before discovered; and found aliment to increase it. But as a large number of citizens of various societies were in the house, several of them firewards, who immediately assembled on the spot; as the house aqueduct gave a full supply of water within ten feet of the fire first discovered, and numerous buckets were at hand, confident hopes were entertained that small limits would be put to the destruction. The most spirited and judicious efforts, however, could only give it a temporary check. It still kept working behind the partition walls, and round the cornices, in places beyond reach, and communicating by the rear to the suite of chambers on the west attic story, in about 20 minutes they were so completely on fire as that columns of flame issued from all their windows into the gallery, and drove therefrom all who were engaged in extinguishing it.

An engine was drawn into the area, and a hose extended to the fifth story, but the tar in the composition of the roof taking fire, the smoke became so suffocatingly dense, as to endanger the lives of the firemen; and in less than half an hour after the discovery of the fire, all the early hopes of preserving the building were lost; and all united in efforts to save the great property in it, belonging to Mr. Barnum, the keeper, the Proprietors, and numerous Societies, Lodgers and Tenants; which, though extensive, were not so successful as the good wishes and exertions of the citizens were ardent and persevering.

In a very short time, so rapid was the progress of the flames, the greater part of the 210 halls, rooms, chambers, &c. comprised in the building, exhibited a mass of intense fire seldom witnessed; about nine o'clock the noble dome came down into the area with a frightful crash; and soon after nearly all the north, and part of the south walls, both more than eighty feet in height, fell, and damaged many of the adjoining buildings; but in no degree equal to the apprehensions of the spectators.

The energies of the firewards, firemen, and citizens, were then exerted to prescribe limits to the effect of the immense mass of fire now kindled; and no other building was wholly consumed, excepting one belonging to Marshal Prince, in Devonshire street, in which was the printing-office of Mr. Ezra Lincoln, who lost a great part of his materials, not only by the fire, but the mismanagement of those who attempted to save them. Several houses, however, were very much damaged, particularly Mr. Wright's house in Congress-street, the upper stories of the Palladium Office, and the building we occupy.

Eleven Printing Establishments were burnt out, or were in such imminent danger as to require the removal of their apparatus. Those of Mr. Lincoln above-mentioned, and the Patriot, in Devonshire-street; Messrs. Parmenter and Norton's, in Rodgers's building; the Daily Advertiser, Recorder, Intelligencer, Palladium, Centinel, and Boston Gazette, and the extensive book offices of Messrs. West, Richardson, and Lord, and Messrs. Wells and Little, all in Congress-street. Goods and furniture were removed from numerous other houses, stores, and cellars.

The Exchange Coffee-House had become the pride and boast of our metropolis; and, under the intelligent, laborious and gentlemanly superintendence of Mr. Barnum, had been admitted by foreigners, as well as natives, to be the most convenient institution of the kind in the United States, and not exceeded by any in Europe. It covered 12,753 feet of ground, measured 132 feet on the north and south, and 84 on the east and west fronts; and was seven stories high. The extent of the distress which this calamity had caused, may be partially estimated from the fact, that, besides the numerous suites of halls, rooms, and chambers, improved by Mr. Barnum, there were in the building an extensive Reading Room, a large Masonic Hall, most elegantly furnished and decorated, in which the Grand Lodge of the State, and several subordinate Lodges, held their meetings; and a superb room for St. John's Lodge, which was assembled when the fire broke out;

The jewels, regalia and records of the Grand Lodge, were preserved by the vigilance of the Grand Tiler; but the losses of the subordinate Lodges, is estimated exceed 5000 dollars.
