LONDON, AUGUST 26.

The following is an extract of a letter received from the county of Tyrone, respecting the awful visitation by storm at Lisauelly House, near Omagh, the seat of the late A. Galbraith, Esq.:—"I must endeavour to give you some idea of the shock we received on Monday evening week, by hearing of the awful death of poor Mr. Galbraith; but indeed, language can hardly paint the horrors of the scene! From his infancy Mr. Galbraith had the most dreadful fear of thunder and lightning; and when this fatal storm began to grow very violent, he had the shutters closed, got candles, and sat down to his bible. The servant came in to lay the cloth for dinner, and he instantly dismissed him, charging him to take the knives and forks out of the room, and entreated every person in the house would go to their devotion, until (as he emphatically said) this awful visitation passed. He was sitting on a sofa, at a small table, his lady opposite to him; his two daughters and their governess at their work; when he got up, after reading for some time, and unfortunately sat down in a corner, and leaned his head back against the wall. He had not been there two minutes when he was struck dead instantaneously. Mrs. Galbraith was thrown on the floor, where she lay quite insensible; one of the children's faces severely scorched, the other burned in the neck, as if three bars of red hot iron had been laid on the place; the window-curtains burned to cinders, and scattered all over the room: the marble chimney-pieces in three rooms shattered in a thousand pieces; the locks twisted off the doors, and 700 panes of glass broken; and a dog in the kitchen killed, and every being in the house (except the governess) more or less injured. You may judge of the size of the house by the number of panes of glass I have mentioned to be broken; and every room, except one, is left almost in ruins."

Extract of a letter from the Agent to Lloyd's at Valencia, dated 10th August:—"We have just been advised that on the 5th inst. the boat of the English brig Ellen, Capt. Richard Cornish, arrived at Alicant, with 10 men. This vessel proceeded from Liverpool, and was bound to Leghorn and Genoa, with a cargo of merchandise; and in the night of the 2d inst. being 44 miles from Cape de Gatt, was boarded by a brig of 16 guns, which appeared to be English. The captain and crew were immediately forced under the hatches, which were then nailed over them; but having begged of the assailants to allow them some ventilation, they cut a hole in the deck, threatening to kill the first that attempted to look through it. While they were employed in plundering the vessel, the captain and crew looked through the opening, and observed that in the formast sail of the pirate there was the mark "James Quillan, Liverpool;" and in the spritsail the same as in the square mainsail, "S. Ashburn, Liverpool." The masts and yards were painted white, the hull-long, and the sides with two yellow streaks, the stern black, with two windows. The captain perceiving no noise for some time, and observing that the vessel made a great deal of water, burst open the hatchway, and saw the brig about three miles distant, and the rigging and sails of his vessel all cut. He missed his small boat, and only found the large one, in which they saved themselves in a very bad state. The following day they were taken up by a Greek vessel, which conducted them near the island of Plana, whence they went to Alicant in a boat.

The Glasgow Chronicle states that the manufactures of Manchester have agreed to advance the wages of the weavers about forty per cent.; from which in consequence an advance may be expected in the price of goods.

The following strange address, respecting the recent disturbances at Manchester, has been written to the electors of Westminster, by Sir Francis Burdett:—

Gentlemen,—On reading the newspapers this morning, having arrived late yesterday evening, I was filled with shame, grief, and indignation, at the account of the blood spilt at Manchester. This, then, is the answer of the boroughmongers to the petitioning people!—This is the practical proof of our standing in no need of reform!—these, the practical blessings of our glorious boroughmonger domination!—this, the use of a standing army in time of peace!—It seems our fathers were not such fools as some would make us believe, in opposing the establishment of a standing army, and sending King William's Dutch Guards out of the country. Yes, would to Heaven they had been Dutchmen, or Switzers, or Hessians, or Hannoverians, or any thing rather than Englishmen, who have done such deeds!—What! kill men unarmed! unresisting! and gracious God! women too, disfigured, maimed, cut down, and trampled upon by dragoons. Is this England! This a Christian land! A land of Freedom! Can such things be? and pass by us, like a summer cloud, unheeded? Forbid it every drop of English blood, in every vein, that does not proclaim its owner bastard.—Will the gentlemen of England support, or wink, at such proceedings? they have a great stake in their country. They hold great estates, and they are bound in duty, and in honor, to consider them as retaining fees on the part of their country, for upholding its rights and liberties. Surely, they will at length awake! and find they have duties to perform! they never can stand tamely by, as lookers on, while bloody Neroes rip open their mothers womb.—They must join the general voice, loudly demanding justice and redress; and head public meetings throughout the United Kingdom, to put a stop in its commencement, to a reign of terror and of blood; to afford consolation, as far as it can be afforded, and legal redress to the widows and orphans mutilated victims of this unpar-
