LONDON, APRIL 29.

EARTHQUAKES.

Earthquake at Cork.—Between the hours of two and three o'clock on Tuesday morning, a shock of an Earthquake was sensibly felt at Cove, Ahada, Middleton, and the neighbourhood of the harbour's mouth. We have had a minute detail of the circumstances attending it at Cove, from a gentleman of the highest respectability, residing in that quarter. At about half past two o'clock a noise was heard like the rumbling of a heavy carriage, accompanying which was a very sensible shaking of the house, bed and furniture, which lasted eight or ten seconds; during the time of its continuance, some of the servants of the house state that they with difficulty preserved themselves from being shook out of the bed—in particular a nurse, whose attention to an infant rendered her more liable to such an accident. Immediately after the shock, water was dashed against the bed-room windows, in such a quantity as to convey the notion that it was thrown at the glass out of vessels. To some persons the noise which accompanied the shock resembled the report of a great gun.

At Hawlbowline Island the sensation was very terrific. The watch-house there is built with immense masses of lime-stone, many of them weighing some hundreds; these, it appeared to the persons in the house, shook in such a manner as to create fears of their tumbling down, and made them run into the open air and fall prostrate. At Ahada, opposite Cove, the noise heard was such as resembled the firing of cannon, and many there, but for the early hour were inclined to think it proceeded from the morning gun in the harbour.

In the town of Middleton the shock was not less severe than in Cork harbour. In one house a bed was shook so violently as to cause the person who lay in it to jump up, under an impression that the floor was giving way; the water-jug was thrown on its side, and the cover shaken off a tea-pot which lay on a shelf in the bed-room. Many persons thought it must have proceeded from some explosion of gun-powder, at Cove or Spike Island, and for a great part of the day were most anxious to hear from their friends there.

One gentleman with whom we have conversed, and who resides in the immediate vicinity of this city, states, that though he did not experience the quaking of the shock, he nevertheless heard the accompanying noise, which he at once recognised as extraordinary.

The more probable conjecture is, that some more violent shock has taken place elsewhere, and that details of some dreadful calamity may be daily expected.—Previous to the account of the awful and destructive earthquake which laid Lisbon in ruins in the year 1755, like sensations were felt in Cove, and the entire coast at that side; and we await with no ordinary anxiety to learn if any parts of the Continent have suffered under a like visitation at present.—(Cork Mercantile Advertiser. April 7.)

STOCKHOLM, MARCH 27.

Several shocks of an earthquake were felt on the 19th of this month, at nine in the morning, at Felkerna, in Dale Carlea. For some days past we have again had snow, and the thermometer is still eight degrees below freezing.
