Fredericton, 2d Sept. 1823.

The answer of the fair Satirist of the Age! a little sun burnt.

FOR more than people do, they oft have blame;
So I'm compell'd to take fair Saturist's name.
The wit I'm charg'd with, part I claim my due,
But others grow amazing witty too!!!
I thought myself the wonder of the times,
Until I read those all-surpassing rhymes,
Whose brilliant flash each gazing face doth warm,
Now I'm no more the "light'ning of the storm."
Last week I left the secret of my age,
Increasing on the multiplying page;
I'm no enchantress, so divinely fair,
My face is near the colour of my hair,
A comely brown—yet not so bright as gold,
And when my teeth were form'd, no pearl was sold,
Which caus'd me to accept the common kind,
They're out of fashion now,--but never mind—
My eyes are black, and very quick to see,
And nature's made them well enough for me:
They "sparkle"—when I'm angry all may know,
For on my cheek is seen an honest "glow";
My forehead is not "snow," or e're this day,
The summer suns had melted it away,
But yet I think it fashion'd pretty well,
Then why it should be laugh'd at, cannot tell
I don't presume with you, fair friends, to shine,*
Yet never claim more than is really mine;
Not of the order of fine forms the first,
Nor do I move among you quite the worst;
But know, although I tower above you all,
Great souls do oft inhabit bodies small.
I don't exhibit such superior grace,
But then my manners are not out of place.
'Tis not impossible, without your art,
I yet may bind secure some worthy heart,
And if too late I find I'm in the day,
I shall not weep my useful eyes away,
May drop a tear—but will not sadly cry,
If I dont make one conquest till I die;
But meet disease and age with patient mind,
And to the will of heaven become resign'd.
Fair friends—I hope to smile at death's release,
And greet you on the shores of love and peace!

* Who have condescended to honor the fair Satirist with an Address.
