person who has been earnestly en-in the pursuit of literature or science collect what prints it cost him o obtine and clear ideas of the various of his study and what satisfaction he successive difficulty were surmounted of the brightest genius and proficiency have employed themselves ing plain and easy ways to the attainment of learning, for the truly enlightened pleasure in diffusing their acquire-ment and it is greatly owing to the simple and perspicuous elucidations of modern that the paths of knowledge have been of their intricacies and that they are delightfully and advantageously pursued. What a contrast does this liberality oppose to the pomp and mystery of pretensions! Paracelsus attempted to entrap the applause of mankind by a vain conceit which his own death exposed, but the sublime discoveries of Newton, simply and unostentatiously explained, have immortalized his fame. The most interesting epoch in the history of the human intellect is certainly that so finely depicted by Roscoe in his life of Horenze di Medici. A long night of ignorance succeeded the fall of the Roman Empire and enshrouded the faculties of man, until the splendour of a constellation of talent burst forth through the long continued gloom, and has ever since spread its enlightening influence over science and the arts. Previously to that epoch whatever related to learning was wrapt up in mystery, and it has since then been the study of wise and good men to convey useful knowledge by easy methods and perspicuous language.

I am anxious to draw the attention of your correspondent Brunswickus to these matters, for I do not recollect ever to have met any writings so completely divested as his are of the true spirit of genuine philosophy. I avoid entering into any argument on his "novel" theories, until he can shew a better acquaintance with the nature of oxygen and caloric, and until he considers insular position and extent of continent as affecting the temperature and variations of climate. Inflated and hyperbolic as his style is, it is easier to bear with it than to read of the trunks of forest shrubs; of exotics fringing the borders of our lakes; and of viewing a valley or a chasm as a tumulus! nothing in the richest mock heroics ever exceeded the idea of "sweeping the atmosphere with a besom of sublime destruction."!!! If Brunswickus means to continue his lucubrations, would it not be a useful employment for him to consider whether his productions displayed Common Sense before he offered them to the public."

I am, Sir,
Your Oht. Servant. S.
