A Scholar of the Female Madras School's farewell to her Mistress.

I'm young in years, my thoughts are weak and few,
Nor is ambition prompts, to see what I can do;
But love I trust will guide my infant strain While this small Barque is wreck'd; upon the raging main

Oh! and must I in secret mourn,
To have you from my bosom torn,
My friend, my mistress, and my stay,
That led me in bright learning's way;
That taught my young and foolish heart
To act a wiser virtuous part.

O may the Lord remember you,
Who did all here, that you could do
To cultivate the stubborn ground,
When little hope in it was found,
The soil you plough'd, the seed was sown,
And now we weep the "harvest home"

Why should I tell, the time's at hand,
When you must leave your infant band
To others fostering care . . . adieu,
My soul with anguish parts from you:
Let every varying thought of mind,
Be on the weak you leave behind.

Farewell! my long lov'd preceptress,
And may the Lord your strivings bless,
That when you die, on hope reclin'd,
You'll with your God a dwelling find;
A dwelling far superior to this,
Where ever reigns eternal bliss.
