

sectionnaire Subjects. We quote the following from a London paper dated April 15.— "It is said that His Majesty received the resignations of the seceders with a tone and manner so decisive, that more than one repented he had not doubted before tendering so fatal an offer. Lord Bexley is said, indeed, to have recalled (if we may use the term) his, and Mr. Peel, it was rumoured, would probably be open to explanation. The King, according to our best advices, appears to have been justly indignant at the moral conspiracy among those he had trusted, and to have resolutely resolved, that no difficulty should make him again take to his confidence men who, from personal hate to a highly gifted individual, could take steps by which the Government of the country, himself, and his really steadfast servants were embarrassed, and the affairs of the kingdom thrown into confusion. Farther as regards the list of Mr. Canning, nothing is yet known, but the public mind is decidedly in favour of the measures adopted by the Sovereign."

LONDON, MARCH, 31.

GREECE.—Letters from Constantinople state that the Capt. Pacha has been disgraced, on account of his bad success against the Greeks. His successor is appointed, and the letters say that the new Commander was never at sea, but is of a savage character, and detests the Greeks. This amiable feeling towards the Christians is the cause of his advance.

A ray of light has again burst over the dark and fluctuating fortunes of Greece; and the City of Pallas, which was of old the focus against which the hostility of Oriental barbarism was directed, is again the centre of warlike operations; and again the prize to be contended for by slavery and independence.

Letters of a recent date from Zante, confirm the intelligence of the Greeks, under Col. Gordon, having relieved the garrison in the Acropolis of Athens. It appears that the British General embarked all the troops which could be spared from the defence of Napoli di Romania, and, attended by the perseverance steam ship, under Capt. Hastings, landed in the neighbourhood of Athens, about the 15th of February. Col. G. then mounted a battery, under the fire of a steam ship, which gave him the command of the Turkish positions. Col. Fabvier sallied from the Acropolis at the same moment that the Turkish army was attacked by Col. Gordon, and the result was eminently successful. The Turks soon retired, leaving a considerable quantity of warlike stores, and opening a free communication between Col. Gordon and Col. Fabvier. The Citadel was immediately supplied with every thing necessary to its future defence. General Church arrived too late to participate in these operations: but from his great experience in training men of the same description as those in the Morea, and his knowledge of the leading Chiefs, we trust that, in conjunction with the naval operations of Lord Cochrane, this is the last campaign which Christian Greece will find it necessary to wage in order to break the yoke of LONDON, April, 14.

From the Globe.

Mr. CANNING possesses the entire confidence of His Majesty, and unlimited powers for the composition of an Administration, on any principles which seem to him best suited to the circumstances of the country.

As a proof of the determination of the King to support the Minister to whom he has entrusted the formation of a government, against any factions or personal opposition, His Majesty, since the resignation of Lord Melville, has determined to appoint His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence, Lord High Admiral of England, with a Council, for the administration of the affairs of the Navy. His Royal Highness will be placed, with regard to the navy, in the same position in which the Duke of York stood with respect to the Army. As in the case of the late Commander-in-chief, he will not have a seat in the Cabinet. The door of office may thus, we suppose, be considered to be closed against Lord Melville.

Lord Bexley has signified his desire to withdraw his resignation.

The desire avowed by Mr. Canning had always been to form a Government on the principles of Lord Liverpool's administration; that is to say on the avowed principle of neutrality with respect to the Catholic Question. Whether the same course will now be desirable, we do not profess to know. It must depend on Mr. Canning's judgment as to the temper and general interests of the country.

Arrangements which have been spoken of, but we do not repeat them with confidence, are the following.

Mr. Huskisson to succeed Mr. Peel at the Home Office.

Mr. Robinson to be called to the House Colonial Secretary.

Lord Grenville to be Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Viscount Dudley and Ward, to be Lord Privy Seal.

The Duke of Wellington has certainly resigned the office of Commander-in-Chief.

Changes so extensive, we imagine, can scarcely be yet definitively settled.

"CITY, Two o'clock.—The jobbers of the alley say, the resignation of the old Tories is only worth a quarter per cent. Consols, which closed on Thursday night at 83, opened at 82½, and gradually advanced 82¾, the present quotation.

The Chancellor, Mr. Canning, and Lord Bexley, had audiences yesterday of the King, at his Palace in St. James's.

Although the Chancellor sent in his resignation to His Majesty on Thursday afternoon, the Earl, it is expected, will retain the Seals for a month longer, till he has given judgment on the cases that have been heard before him.

Mr. Peel after having resigned on Thursday afternoon sent the official papers and boxes to the Home Office. The Right Hon. Gentleman has been frequently to the Duke of Wellington's within the last few days.

Mr. Croker transacted business with Mr. W. Horton, Under Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, at the Colonial Office, yesterday.

The Under Secretary of State for the Home Department did not attend at the Home Office yesterday.

Prince Polignac, the French Ambassador, transacted business yesterday at the Office of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

(From the Courier.)

We alluded yesterday to the rumour of his Grace the Duke of Wellington having resigned his office as Commander-in-Chief

We have to announce, also, the resignation of some of His Majesty's household. His Grace the Duke of Montrose, Lord Chamberlain; his son the Marquis of Graham, Vice Chamberlain; and his Grace the Duke of Dorset, Master of the Horse, have retired from their respective departments. These are, comparatively, subordinate, and not, perhaps, unexpected movements; but what must the country think of the whole proceeding? A more extraordinary attempt to fetter the King's choice—to circulate his authority—to abridge His Royal prerogative—is not to be found, we believe, in the history of this country; certainly not within the last century. We have the satisfaction of knowing, that His Majesty views the matter as a Sovereign so circumstanced should do; and the best proof that can be given of this, if proof were needed, is the promptitude with which the vacancy created by the secession of Viscount Melville has been supplied.

April 16.

The Marquis of Anglesea, to the head of the Ordnance, the Master of the Rolls (Sir John Copley) to the Lord Chancellor. No other appointments are yet filled.

As the Administration at present stands (if the movements be true,) a good deal remains yet to be done before the work of regeneration is finished.

We should not be surprised if His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge were now to have the army; there would then be an end to this mean bickering for official supremacy.

To be leased for a Term of years, and possession given immediately.
