For the Royal Gazette.

ON THE DEATH OF A PROMISING YOUTH.
 Nature, say, why falls that willing tear?
 That up-drawn sigh, what makes it so severe?
 Is that bright youth in death for ever veil'd?
 Have all the tender cares of friendship fail'd?
 Lamented Youth! let lonely friendship mourn,
 For him who died, but now makes no return!
 Around him virtue spread her heavenly light,
 But death has cast a veil of earthly night;
 On future good his generous spirit thought,
 A life of usefulness was what he sought:
 His days in study ardent had been spent,
 And still to learn gave pleasure and content—
 Impartial Death! thy stern resistless power,
 The brightest hopes of life blasts in an hour—
 Friends mourn in anguish where thy steps have trod,
 And consolation find alone in God.

SOCIUS.

Saint John, September 29th, 1828.

During the time all this was happening, the wretched mother was with great difficulty restrained from her wanderings: New-Haven and her boy were the only ideas which kept constant possession of her shattered mind; and at times she was like a chained wild creature straining to be off. Once she made her escape, but was overtaken a few hours after, and persuaded to return. During this short absence, her hostess observed a small bunch under the carpet near her bed side; and on removing it, found it to be the little blue robe she had grasped at the time of the shipwreck. It was very dirty, and retained offensive marks of the child's sea-sickness. When the wanderer was brought back, her joy was great at finding the robe she thought she had lost. She was very averse to having it washed, and the proposal seemed to distress her exceedingly, after a few days she observed, "It is just as the little creature last wore it—if it must be washed for decency's sake, I wish it might be done without my knowledge."

Answers to the letters did not arrive: and the will of the maniac was no longer to be controlled. Comfortably dressed, and furnished with money, to enable her to reach the British Vice Consul in Portland, she re-commenced her journey. A very rational letter to her hostess, announced the kind respectation she met from Mr. Sherwood, the British Vice Consul at Portland, and a polite letter from that gentleman expressed gratitude for her kindness to a distressed country-woman—a conviction of the truth of her story, and a perfect recollection of the circumstances of the shipwreck which she alluded to. Another letter from Mrs. Bradlee, dated Boston, spoke of the kindness of several English people in that place, and her intention to go to New-Haven immediately. This is the last that has been heard of her. After her departure, a letter from the Postmaster in New-Haven was received, in which the writer apologized for his silence, by stating he had been a long time absent. The amount of his letter was, that he knew of no gentleman by the name of James Townsend in that place. About the same time, a letter was received from James Buchanan, Esq., of New York. It was very cold and laconic; answered no questions; disclaimed relationship with a person by the name of Mrs. Bradlee; said the woman was delirious, and should be put into a hospital.

No one knows what has become of this interesting wanderer. Perhaps, when she arrived at New-Haven, and found her pursuit hopeless, the little light in her mind was extinguished forever! If her story be an imposition, it certainly does not seem like it. There are five or six New-Havens in the United States. If James Townsend resides in any one of them, we trust he will lose no time in making these circumstances known to William Augustus Bowring, London, provided there is such a person to be found.

Any information of the above wanderer, or the boy therein alluded to, will be thankfully received by the British Vice Consul at Portland.
