If separation there must be, let England manage that it shall be effected with as much advantage to the interests of both parties as circumstances will permit. Let both countries avail themselves of their common origin and their common interests, to cement a friendly intercourse, and establish a strict alliance, mutually beneficial, and calculated to promote and to perpetuate the independence of the New World. He urged these considerations apart from any thing of mere national or selfish views, apart likewise from that which was greatly subordinate to these—the patronage connected with those colonies.—N. Y. Albion, Aug 30.

Mr. O'Connell has been elected for Clare by a very large majority over Mr. Vesey Fitzgerald. The circumstance produced a great excitement throughout Ireland. As Mr. O'Connell will not, of course, take the prescribed oath, his election will be void, and Mr. Fitzgerald being the next highest on the poll, will resume his seat in the House of Commons. It should be recollected, that Mr. Fitzgerald has always been a stern and inflexible friend to Ireland, and a warm advocate for Catholic Emancipation. The opposition to him, and the abusive language he received on the hustings, seems a little singular; for the most violent opposer of the Catholics could not have received more unwarrantable treatment than this excellent man did from Mr. O'Connell. Conscious of his innocence of all that was laid to his charge, stung with ingratitude, and under the excess of his feelings, he exclaimed, "Do I deserve this treatment?" The Catholics, nevertheless, out voted him, and he is left to enjoy the bitter reward of their ingratitude. His crime was, that he joined the Duke of Wellington's ministry, and accepted a situation in which he could be really and essentially useful to his country! and the Duke of Wellington's offence, it would seem, was, that he appointed a friend of the Catholics to one of his most important offices. How true it is that Ireland's worst enemies are to be found within her own bosom.—ib.

The Quebec Gazette by Authority very justly recommends to the perusal of its readers in general, the article we have copied from that paper in another part of our present number, under the title of "Oriental Translations." The article is indeed a remarkable evidence of that rapid progress which the light of Reason, supported by the active powers of Education, Virtue, and Religion, is now making, even in Countries from which such gratifying proofs of its increasing influence could hardly have been anticipated.

Committal of Capt. Stewart, late of the Mary Russell.—This wretched man, whose hands are imbrued with the blood of so many human beings, arrived in this city yesterday, in a chaise, from Skibbereen, where he had been in custody for some days, and was immediately committed to the county gaol, under a county Magistrate's warrant. He is a man of small stature, and rather thin and pale in the face, with a sharp quick eye. As far as we can learn, the man appears in a sane and tranquil state of mind, and has spoken of the tragedy, in which he was the principal, with apparent indifference. Some of his observations on this head have been committed to us, but for obvious reasons we forbear from giving them publicity.—Cork Constitution.

1st.—"Whether any, and what parts have been done by Contract; and if so, the names of the contractors, the nature of the Contract, whether so much per Rod, or other distance; or so much for the whole; or in what other way; how the contract has been performed, and what sums have actually been paid.

2d.—"If done by days work, to state the names of the workmen; the rate of wages per day, of each man; whether found in provisions or not; the number of days which each man has worked; the amount paid each man; the quality of work done; and the mode in which the same has been performed.

3d.—"The proper receipts should accompany the Accounts of all Monies paid by the Commissioner; and if the same are signed with a mark, they must be witnessed by at least one respectable witness.

4th.—The Commissioners accounts should be attested to, before a Justice of the Peace; and the oath to be in the following form or to that effect:
