A strong sensation has been made here, by the arrival of a Despatch by Express from the British Minister at Washington, to the Lieutenant Governor; and some rumours of a very serious nature have accordingly been circulated.

We now understand that the American Government having communicated in a friendly manner to the British Minister, the intention of sending a Detachment of Troops to be stationed in the acknowledged Territory of the United States, within the line traced by the British Commissioners from Mars Hill; it was considered expedient to apprise the Lieutenant-Governor of this measure as soon as possible; and likewise to make him acquainted with the explanations and assurances which had been given to the British Minister, by the American Government, and which, we are happy to learn, are such as to have been satisfactory to the British Minister, as to the intentions and objects of the Government of the United States.

The river is now free from ice as far up, we are informed, as Spring Hill—little or no ice is at present running; and we do not apprehend, from the favorable state of the weather for it during the last few days, that any material body will come down again thus far;—which, renders it not impracticable for the Steam Boat to be here by the end of this, or the beginning of next week, at farthest. The weather continues mild today, with a slight drizzly rain.

From the St. John City Gazette, April 16

The "LETTERS OF VERAX," published some time since in this paper, have been republished in the London New Times, and have excited new interest on the Boundary Question. The following article is prefixed to the Letter No. I, republished in that paper of 31st January:—

QUESTION OF BOUNDARY WITH THE
UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA.

It was the remark of a Statesman, whose political conjectures have almost passed for, and proved, predictions, that the most frequent and fatal errors in the policy of Great Britain, arise from the inability or unwillingness of her Ministers to contemplate her vast and distant dominions as one common and united empire. It requires a larger conception, profounder views, and information more varied and personal, than are commonly found, to adjust and direct the measures of Government, according to the idea Mr. Burke had imagined. Possessions out of sight lose their interest, and are seldom considered a part of ourselves; and it is easier to obtain of the generosity of this country an army to succour an ally, or a fleet from her philanthropy to dismember another, than the necessary care and means of asserting the integrity and securing the preservation of our own colonies in North America, though our exports to them are scarcely less than to Greece and Portugal together; and our imperious thence give employment to one-fourth part of our foreign tonnage. We are looking vaguely to the East, while the Americans of the United States are laying claim, and laying hold of, our empire in the West.—Are the Russians to cross the Pruth? Are they to acquire the left provinces of the Danube? Are the Americans to pass the St. John? Are they to hold the right bank and mouth of the St. Lawrence? It would be well if the latter questions excite a tithe of the interest wasted on the former, for they concern us infinitely more. The very key to the whole of the North American provinces, the center of their communication with each other, and with us, the pivot upon which all our power in that quarter must turn, is demanded by the Americans; nor is our right alone questioned—they are endeavouring to oust us from possession.

By what reason of National Law their attempts to change the possession is justified, is not known, but their claim to the right is founded upon the construction of the treaty of 1783. The Americans are subtle in argument, and proud of their ability in negotiating; and, indeed, they have argued or negotiated us out of so many and great concessions of land and water from 1783 to 1818, that they have at last had the courage to propose, for commercial questions, not only the admission of their manufactures into our colonies, upon the same terms as our own, but even the carrying trade between the colonies and the mother country; and for territorial demands, such an interpretation of a treaty as must, in its consequences, transfer to them the whole colonies themselves. This is a little too strong. In the commercial question, Government seems finally to have found decision and firmness. The disputed territory, it is to be hoped, will be maintained with equal resolution. If any ask, of what consequence is this territory? It is sufficient to desire them to trace upon the map the claims of each country; and if it be then inquired, whether we have any and what reason for retaining it, besides the danger of conceding, an answer no less satisfactory may be given. Certain letters, five in number, have lately appeared in a Colonial Journal, (the St. John N. B. City Gazette,) in reply to some publications in the American States. They seem to be written by a person who is thoroughly acquainted with the subject, and whose reasons are strong and candid, and expressed simply, and without passion. A good portion of the Daily Press is devoted to the private disputes of individuals; perhaps the argument in a public controversy with a Foreign Power may obtain or deserve equal notice; for the discussion is not only important in its consequences, but very interesting in the abstract, as a question of National Law.
