

the right and left of the frame work. At two o'clock the screens being drawn slowly up, disclosed to the view of an immense assemblage the two prisoners, about four feet apart, each habited in a white garment. Leonard stood on the right, very thin and pale, and apparently much agitated; he at first held down his head, but in about two minutes he looked up, and spoke very slowly and disjointly. He declared that he never committed any murder or robbery whatever; that he was innocent of this murder of which he had been found guilty, and for which he was about to die. He was not going to say who committed the murder; he had no business to do so, and he would not; he never murdered Coyle—and he craved the prayers of those around him.

M'Monagle, a stout and handsome man, appeared perfectly resigned, and undismayed by the scene before him, looking full in the face of the people; he told the whole of the transactions of the day in as far as he was concerned,—he stated that he was detained by the parties from proceeding on his journey; that he became partly intoxicated, and that as a dying man, he believed he used no other violence towards Coyle, than aiming a kick at him between the legs of another man; and concluded in the following words: "I am as innocent of the murder of Coyle, as my little son is, who is here this day—I am prepared to die, thank God. And now all around me take this warning—that it was the drinking of rum that brought me to this disgraceful and untimely end—and may the Lord have mercy upon me." In an instant afterwards the signal was given, the drop fell, and the miserable men were in the agonies of death. Leonard struggled but a minute, M'Monagle several minutes.—As soon as they were dead, the bodies were cut down and placed in coffins brought thither by their friends; the High Sheriff then turned to the people and read the reprieve of the prisoner Haley, who had been condemned to be executed with those who had just suffered. The Sheriff also stated that Haley had expressed a wish to see the bodies before the coffins were closed, which he had granted.—Haley was then brought out and kneeling down, kissed the cold cheeks of his unfortunate companions with whom but for the clemency of the Lieutenant Governor, he would have been lying side by side as cold and as lifeless.—Chronicle.

POSTSCRIPT.

QUEBEC, OCTOBER 17, 1839.

Yesterday morning at a very early hour, an Aide-de-Camp of His Excellency the Right Honourable C. P. Thomson, Governor General, arrived in town, having left Her Majesty's Frigate Pique, off the coast, on the preceding night. The wind being adverse the Canada steamer was dispatched at 6 o'clock to bring up the Frigate. When the steamer reached Her Majesty's ship, the breeze from the west had so greatly increased, that it was clear she could make but little head way with so lofty a vessel in tow, and the ebb tide also to contend with. The Frigate therefore anchored, when the steam boat returned to Quebec, and reached the wharf at about half past five o'clock, having on board Mr. Murdoch, His Excellency's Secretary, and some other officers.—A double Guard of Honour had been marched to the Queen's wharf, under the expectation that the Governor General, with the Commander of the Forces, would land from the steamboat; they were followed by a number of citizens anxious to witness the disembarkation of their Excellencies. When it was seen, however, that the Canada was steering to the Steamboat wharf, the crowd divided, some remaining with the Military and others repairing to the Boat. But the news that the distinguished personages had not left the Frigate was soon communicated, and the guards marched back to their respective barracks.

It is understood that despatches from the new Governor in Chief were forwarded, by steamboat, last evening to His Excellency Sir John Colborne at Montreal.

The Canada returned again to the Frigate which was signaled from the telegraph at noon to-day as being under weigh.

At half-past 2 this afternoon the Frigate made her appearance coming round Point Levi, and at three came to anchor abreast of the town. His Excellency the Governor General has not disembarked and it is understood will remain on board until the arrival of Sir John Colborne from Montreal, when he will land and be immediately sworn into office.

General Sir R. D. Jackson was expected to disembark, and preparations were made for his reception with the usual Military honors; the gallant General however does not appear inclined to part company with his shipmates, and remains on board for the night at least.

We have been informed that His Excellency the Right Hon. C. P. Thomson will hold a levee before his departure from Quebec, and that the time and place will be officially notified in the usual manner.

Admitted.

On the 19th instant, by the Rev. J. Birkmyre, A. M., Mr. Walter Grieves, to Miss Matilda Donald, both of the Parish of Saint Mary's.
