

of many colored buntin and of green boughs, beautifully illuminated with curious chandeliers, ornied by bristling bayonets piled in each other, casting from their polished surfaces rays of lustre, which tended in no slight degree to give animation to the scene. At half past eight the leek was crowded with the gay and merry throng, and

"Then a soft and spirit-breathing sound
Rose like a steam of rich distilled perfume,
And stole upon the ear?"

The cry of "partners" resounded through the crowd, the gay quadrille was formed and dancing commenced with a spirit of intense ardor, that proclaimed,

"Had o'er the dancers' minds complete command."
The quadrille, the lively gallopade, the merry cotillon, the whirling waltz, and the noisy Sir Roger had each their turn with the votaries of the "fantastic too," until supper was announced by a beat of the martial drum. On descending to the lower deck, you perceive a table some forty feet in length having all the luxuries of the season, spread upon its ample leaves. After the company had done full justice to the repast prepared for them by their gallant and hospitable entertainers, a series of toasts were drunk in ruby wine, with all the enthusiasm attendant on such a scene. Among the toasts, after the Queen's health had been first proposed and drunk with all the honors, were Lady Mary Fitz Roy, Sir Charles Fitz Roy, and prosperity to Prince Edward Island, to both of which His Excellency responded in a peculiarly neat and appropriate manner, and concluded by proposing the health of Captain Baynes and the officers of the Andromache. The gallant Captain returned thanks, and then after several other toasts had been drunk in flowing bumpers, the enlivening dance was resumed, and sustained with true devotion, until it was announced,

That yonder comes the powerful King of day,
Rejoicing in the East.
