"LET US PRAY!"

(From "Aid and other Poems," by Miss M. A. Browne, published in 1828.)

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air;
His watchword at the gates of death;
He enters heaven with prayer!"

MONTGOMERY.

Let us pray! when morn's first light
Pierces through the clouds of night;
While the flowers are dewy yet,
Ere the twinkling stars are set;
Ere the strife and stir begin,
Of this world of woe and sin—
For a blessing on the day,
To its Maker—let us pray!

Let us pray! amidst the strife
Of the city's varied life;
In the pageant, in the crowd,
Midst the humble or the proud;
With the foe or with the friend,
May the voiceless prayer ascend;
With the mournful or the gay,
Young or aged—let us pray!

Let us pray! when over heaven
Comes the lovely light of even;
When the distant vesper hymn,
Rising through the twilight din,
On the evening wind sweeps by,
Like an air harp's melody;
When the distant sea is grey,
At that soft hour—let us pray!

Let us pray! when storms arise,
Darkening o'er the azure skies;
When the thunder tempests come,
Purging o'er our peaceful homes;
When the angry lightning's flash;
When the rain's thick torrents dash—
In that hour of wild dismay,
For protection—let us pray!

Let us pray! when winter dreads
Closeth in the vanished year;
Wraps in snow the lofty hill,
Chains in frost the lowly rill;
When let loose the chilling breeze
Sweeps the last leaves from the trees;
When the summer flowers decay,
Looking on them—let us pray!

Let us pray!—Around the hearth,
Check the voice of childish mirth,
Ere they go to rest in peace,
Mid the infant's prattle cease,
Tend the patient's languid rise,
With its evening sacrifice,
While the artless prayer they say
With our children—let us pray!

Let us pray! when slumber flies,
And the sad tear dims our eyes;
When there is no voice or sound
In the midnight stillness round;
When fear's dark forebodings start,
Clouding o'er the mourning heart,
For bright hope's consoling ray—
In the silence—let us pray!

Let us pray! when at the last,
Joy and sorrow shall have past;
When around our dying bed
Sighs are breathed and tears are shed;
In that hour of awful thought,
When the things of earth are nought,
Ere the spirit flies away,
For Heaven's mercy, let us pray!

Miscellaneous.

THE QUEEN OF THE BONIS.—The Bonis are a negro tribe, who live in the forests in the environs of Guiana, and have retired to the steepest and most mysterious parts, in order not to be molested by their white neighbours. I believe their name of Bonis was a French soldier, who had deserted from Cayenne with arms and baggage. To avoid the punishment that awaited him he fled to the desert of Guiana, and sought a refuge among a tribe, formed of negroes who had escaped from slave-ships, or from the plantations of the colonies. He married a negro woman, and obtained the affections of those people to such a degree that they made him king. As soon as he had the command, he organized the 7,000 to 8,000 negroes composing the colony, drilled and exercised them, and rendered them formidable warriors. France and Holland, on hearing of this transformation, hastened to enter into an alliance with the deserter king. He died, unfortunately, before he could impart to the colony all the developments he had contemplated. The negroes, grateful for the services rendered them by their king, have maintained his widow in the exercise of royal authority; and she is quite deserving of that honour. After ascending mountains rising from 400 to 500 toises above the level of the sea, we reached a vast plateau where the forests were less thick and wild. We soon perceived a long line of huts, forming a sort of camp. All the huts consisted of four posts fixed in the ground, and covered with straw. We remarked one distinguished from the others by its superior extent and elegance: it was the palace of her black majesty. We moved in that direction, accompanied by a multitude of negroes, who had crowded about us from all sides. We found the black queen sitting upon a carpet of foliage, and taking a frugal meal. On seeing us she came to us with much gracefulness. I remarked in her certain European manners, which she was no doubt indebted for to the Frenchman whom she had married. She made us sit down by her, and share in her repast, which consisted of coconuts, bananas, bread-tree fruit, and a salad from the palm-tree. What pleased me most was some fresh water, not having drunk any for four months past. After the repast, I visited the colony, and, on beholding some thousands of robust and active negroes, felt fully sensible that France had good reason to deal with them cautiously. The Bonis might, without any difficulty, ravage all our settlements. They are impregnable in their mountains and impenetrable forests. They had firearms, but do not make much use of them, preferring their poisoned arrows, which they discharge with unerring dexterity. Every negro has his dwelling, and works for himself. He is perfectly free, and, when he pleases, goes and sells his produce at Cayenne. The queen exercises a very moderate authority, being content to receive slight tributes, and to muster her subjects on important occasions. The Bonis have few laws, and yet very little litigation. He who respects the life and property of others is free in his actions, and accounts for them to nobody. When contests arise, they are decided by old men, who are called popos, or papas, or fathers. These old men are objects of great respect. When one of them says, "In my time matters were so and so," all differences cease, and his decision submitted to. Their religion is a mixture of Tithism and Christianity; they worship little human figures of wood, which are suspended to their necks, and cross themselves. When the sun rises, they lie prostrate, and adore it.—Foreign periodical.

EFFECT OF EMPLOYMENT ON THE INSANE.—The occupation of the patients has always formed a leading feature in the regulation of the Hanwell Asylum, and has given it a celebrity throughout Europe. The bazaar, the gardens and farm, the laundry, the bakchouse, the brew-house, the kitchen, the shops of the smith and carpenter, the shoemaker and tailor, are thus converted into so many convalescent wards. In whatever part of the establishment work of any kind is going on, some patients are in some way or other furnished with a little occupation; and this employment tends in many cases to advance the recovery of those who are beginning to improve, and affords opportunities for little tests of self-control and temper which are valuable preparatives for being returned to society. There are also several incurable patients, whom daily but not severe occupation relieves from most of the misery attendant on their mental condition. Many insane persons who wish to be employed, and to whom employment is extremely useful, are incapable of regular application to any employment whatever. Their work, at the best, is desultory, and often imperfect, and for severe labour their malady and their diet equally disqualify them; but the value of occupation, even of the slightest kind, to themselves, can scarcely be overstated. As much care as possible is taken that those who cannot be induced to join in any kind of work should be as long as possible prevented from sinking into total inactivity. Notwithstanding every attention, there are some in whom this progress to inertness and torpor cannot be prevented. Examples may be seen in this, as in all asylums, of patients who will sit motionless from morning to night; doing nothing for days, weeks, or months, but when urged to action; seldom or never speaking; sometimes requiring to be fed like children; but the functions of their limited degree of life continuing, although feebly, and so as to make its extinction at all times a probable event.—Report of Dr. Conolly, Resident Physician at the Hanwell Lunatic Asylum.

ANTIQUITIES IN DUNDEE.—For some time past, workmen have been busily engaged demolishing the old house, of three stories, adjoining the east end of the Calendering Works of Messrs. Shaw and Company, on the north side of the Cowgate, without the Port, to make way as we understand, for the erection of a place of worship in connexion with the United Secession Church. It will be remembered that the ground floor of this tenement was considerably higher than the level of the street; and in digging away the earth, in the course of this week, a large quantity of human bones, with several skulls, were turned up by the labourers. Numbers of these were greatly decayed, and others were in a tolerable state of preservation—one skull in particular, apparently that of a young woman, had the greater part of the teeth remaining, beautifully white, and firmly fixed in the upper jaw. The bones were found lying without regard to any particular direction, as if they had been hastily huddled together, and generally from twelve to eighteen inches only, below the level of the floor. The site of the house, as well as a large surrounding space, in former times bore the name of the "Seskmenis Zeardis" (Sickmen's Yards), from having been the place where the booths were erected for the accommodation of such as were infected with the plague, when that dreadful scourge depopulated the town between the years 1540 and 1545; and thus the fact of such a quantity of bones being found at present is easily accounted for. When Monk stormed the town in the year 1651, the assault was made at the east end adjoining the Cowgate Port, and at that point the carnage would doubtless be considerable. But these relics of mortality cannot be the remains of any of those who had fallen in defence of the town; for this reason, that the house was erected long anterior to that period, as the evidences of the property bear dates so far back as about the year 1600—hence the bones must be referred to the era of the pestilence.—Dundee Advertiser.

MR. P. L. SIMMONDS, of Chichester, Sussex, has one of the largest, if not the very largest collection of newspapers possessed by any one individual. They are in number more than 5000, and consist of files and specimens of the newspapers of every country, whether now published, or at any former period. Some of them are more than a century old, and when compared with the broad sheets of the present day, sink into utter insignificance. Many of these specimens are the first and only numbers or short files of journals which were attempted but not continued at Tripoli, Malta, Lisbon, Jamaica, Barbados, Sandwich Islands, &c. &c. They are published in all the principal languages of Europe—Russian, Spanish, German, French, Portuguese, Swedish, Italian, Danish, Maltese, Modern Greek, Bengalee, &c.; but the largest proportion are in the English language. The size, type, paper, and getting up of many are exceedingly curious. They have been collected with much time, trouble, and expense, in furtherance of the work on the "History and Statistics of Newspapers," on which Mr. Simmonds is engaged. The Trustees of the British Museum have deemed the collection so valuable, that they have entered, we understand, into arrangements for their final transfer to the Museum Library. As Mr. Simmonds is still pursuing his task and prosecuting his researches in this wide field of ephemeral literature, he will eventually have obtained a most rare and unparalleled mass of newspapers, and a vast body of singular information, which will render the volumes on which he is engaged exceedingly interesting and useful.

THE DAYS OF YORE.—Forty years ago, young ladies of the first respectability learned music, but it was the humming of the spinning wheel, and learned the necessary steps of dancing following it. Their pianoforte was a loom—their parasol, a broom—and their novels, a bible.
