

vious performance ever attempted in this place. Every thing was conducted with a circumspection suited to the character of the music, and becoming the place selected for hearing it. I cannot, at this time, ask for space to particularize all the individuals to whom the audience was indebted for this musical treat; but I must not omit to mention that the company was graced by the presence of Lady Colebrooke herself, who, with the Misses Colebrooke, in kind condescendence to wishes expressed, honored the entertainment by taking a part in it. The funds realized for the Infant School, after paying all expenses, I should think could not be much; this being but a repetition of the former pieces, and partaking more of the character of a free entertainment. It would be unjust to conclude these observations without a passing allusion to the condescending and benevolent spirit that has ever characterized His Excellency Sir William, during his administration, and Lady Colebrooke, in the commendable office of Charity, of which promoting Infant and Sabbath Schools may be fairly reckoned a part. Lady Colebrooke, soon after arriving here, learning that there was much suffering among the poor of the community, placed herself at the head of the Ladies of Fredericton, in forming a Ladies' Charitable Society, which has since been carried on with energy, tempered by prudence, and has done much towards lessening the wants and alleviating the distresses of the unfortunate of the human family;—and these musical entertainments, while they have improved by their practice, and pleased in their performance, have been used with success in the purposes of benevolence; many thanks are therefore due to Lady Colebrooke and the Ladies of Fredericton generally, for their tenderness and exertion in behalf of the needy, and to the Committee and actors of the Oratorio in particular, for the useful and gratifying manner in which they have contributed towards this necessary and laudable object.—[Communicated.]
