 In this number we have commenced the publication of a valuable little work, entitled "COLONIES AT HOME, &c.," which we recommend to the attentive perusal of our readers. It is the production of the enlightened and philanthropic WILLIAM ALLEN, of the Society of Quakers, who established a small Colony at Lindfield, in Sussex, with the object of securing the independence and augmenting the comforts of the Peasantry, by introducing on the allotment or system of improved husbandry, on those scientific principles in the management of Land, by which the largest amount of produce could be derived from their labour. The details are the practical result of these experiments, and which have led to the application of the same views in all parts of the United Kingdom.
