OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, Jan. 19.

Parliament was this day opened by Her Majesty, in person, with the usual forms.

Long before twelve o'clock, the hour at which the doors were to be opened, vast crowds had assembled around the exterior of the house to witness the arrival of the peers and peeresses who were to be present on the occasion, and, very soon after the doors were opened, the Royal gallery was filled. The peeresses, and those ladies who had tickets, continued to arrive in rapid succession up to within a short time before Her Majesty reached the house, and the most advantageous seats for witnessing the ceremony were speedily occupied. By an arrangement different from what we remember to have seen on former occasions, the front benches on either side of the house were reserved for the use of the peers, who were, therefore, present in greater numbers than usual. But this arrangement was productive of much disappointment to those ladies who had arrived late, and who, seeing vacant seats, naturally desired to occupy them. The officers of the house required all their firmness and all their courtesy in order to deny the fair applicants for favour. Every available place both in the body of the house and in the galleries, was occupied before Her Majesty arrived, and some of those ladies who were so unfortunate as to be placed at the extreme rear of the stranger's gallery could not by possibility have obtained a view of the proceedings.

Almost all the members of the corps diplomatique, including the Count de St. Aulaire, were present. Among the bishops we observed the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Oxford, the Bishop of Ely; and the judges were—the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Baron Platt, Mr. Justice Williams, Mr. Justice Wightman, and Mr. Baron Parke. Lord Langdale and Lord Campbell were also there. Among the first peers who arrived, were the Earl of Zetland, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Charleville, the Marquis of Camden, Earl Fitzwilliam, and the Earl of Cardigan.

The Ministers present were the Marquis of Lansdowne, Earl Grey, the Earl of Clarendon, the Marquis of Clanricarde, and the Earl of Auckland.

The extreme darkness, occasioned by the foginess and gloominess of the weather, rendered it necessary to light up the house, so that a much more brilliant effect was produced than is ever usual by daylight, and the jewels worn by the ladies shone resplendently.

At about a quarter to 2 o'clock a flourish of trumpets announced a Royal arrival, and in a few minutes after His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge entered the house. He was warmly greeted. His Royal Highness shook hands and conversed with several peers; among the rest with the bishops, and Lord Campbell. The Lord Chancellor, too, who had arrived a few moments before, also talked with his Royal Highness. The Duke of Wellington arrived about five minutes after the Duke of Cambridge, with whom he immediately entered into conversation. The Duke also conversed with Lord Dalhousie.

Precisely at 2 o'clock the guns were heard which announced the approach of Her Majesty, and, in a few minutes after, the prolonged note of the trumpet resounding through the Royal gallery apprised those who were assembled in the House of Peers that Her Majesty had arrived. Immediately afterwards the procession of Officers of the Household and others who attended Her Majesty on these occasions entered the house by the side door leading from the Royal gallery. The Earl of Zetland bore the Cap of Maintenance, the Duke of Wellington, the Sword of State, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Crown. Her Majesty followed, accompanied by Prince Albert. The whole assembly rose as
