

partial benefit. But until general remedies can be discovered do not let us refuse to adopt partial ones.

The London Morning Herald of the 15th ultimo, contains the following:

"It is reported in the city that a coolness has arisen between a certain illustrious personage and the Duke of Wellington, on the subject of the Russian and Turkish war. His Grace, it is said, wishes to put a stop to the ambitious projects of the Czar, and that he has proposed, in the first instance, firmly to remonstrate with Nicholas; and, if that should fail, to declare war against him.—To neither of these propositions, it is asserted, the illustrious personage alluded to will agree. That, in short, has he determined neither to declare war against the Emperor, nor to risk one by any decided remonstrance. For our part, we do not believe this story.

The London Morning Journal of the 16th, in reply to the above, says:—'We have the very highest authority for saying that the statement of a coolness between an illustrious person and the Minister of the Crown, which we published several days ago, was substantially correct. The Minister to whom we allude has had no private conference with the King, since the expressions he used in reference to the Marquis of Anglesea's defence were made public. These expressions have, as they merit, given serious offence.'

They were directly levelled at the Sovereign, at that Sovereign who is son of George the Third—and who can vindicate his dignity, as he ought to do, even at the sacrifice of private partiality. The Duke of Wellington cannot long be premier: and as for Mr. Peel, his retirement is settled. We wish him all peace and every happiness in those shades where neither the smiles of the Court, nor the reproaches of the people, can penetrate to his annoyance.

THE LATE ARCHDEACON BEST.

On the 9th instant we took notice of an account which had been received here by the May mail, of the death of the Venerable Archdeacon Best; and although, in giving publicity to that statement, we did so from being entirely without any grounds whereon we might have rested a confident hope that such statement would prove to be erroneous; there were, nevertheless, on the other hand, many circumstances existing at the time, towards which the private feelings of friendship were strongly attracted, from the plausible aspect under which they then appeared. We conceive, however, that it would have been treating the venerable character of our lamented Rector with disrespect if we had not acted as we did upon the very credible testimony and painful assurances with which we were so unexpectedly furnished. That testimony and those assurances, we regret to say, have since received many additional evidences of their veracity; and one of them, in particular, it is now our duty to mention.

Upon entering Christ Church on Sunday last, we found that "House of Prayer" dressed in the sad habiliments of deep mourning—it force conviction in a moment, that every rational hope had been entirely dissipated, and that those whose duty and inclination impelled them to exercise a circumspect forbearance on the receipt of the first account, had subsequently found it impossible to refuse their reluctant assent by withholding any longer the last token of outward respect due to the dignified character and sacred station of the departed.

We are aware that it falls not strictly within the general province of a Newspaper to enter into particular discussions about matters purely of a religious tendency; but circumstances will sometimes concur to render it unavoidable; and we believe that the present instance may justly be included among those occasional exceptions.

In the morning, the Reverend GEORGE McCAWLEY, A. M. delivered a discourse relating to this subject that must long be remembered by all who heard it, but more especially by those who were sufficiently acquainted with the object of it fully to appreciate its worth. The style of that discourse was a striking illustration of the simplicity of truth; while the manner of its delivery told, far more eloquently than words could express it, "how much he loved him." He needed not, for himself, to have used that touching sentence, "We walked together as friends." It was too evidently the tongue of friendship flutering under the performance of the last friendly office.

The Reverend Gentleman's very appropriate text was taken from the 13th Heb. v. 7, 8.—Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God; whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation: Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever. From those words he preached a sermon whose every syllable was listened to with deep and profound attention. It comprehended a condensed history of the late Pastor's ministerial and domestic life, from the period of his residence in the Sister Province down to his departure from this but a few short months ago; his bland and unassuming deportment in the discharge of the various and important duties of an arduous situation; his unceasing labours in the vineyard of his Great Master; his love for the people of God, and his paternal and constant watchfulness over the best interests of the flock "committed to his charge"; his affection for the rising generation around him, exemplified in the provision he made for their religious instruction; and his anxiety in succouring the distressed and indigent on all occasions. He also truly said, in substance, that the Church had lost, in him, a zealous and a faithful Servant; and the Clergy of his Archdeaconry, an affectionate brother. We have used the words truly, from our own personal knowledge; and this is not the time when we should refuse to add, upon the same unquestionable evidence, that, in him, the fatherless found a father, and the stranger a rare and an invaluable friend.

We have said thus much, from an irresistible sense of duty, and for the satisfaction of those friends of the deceased who could not have had the opportunity of hearing the gratifying and honorable tribute of esteem which was so eloquently and feelingly paid to his memory, at the time above mentioned.

In the afternoon the same Reverend Gentleman again officiated, and preached a most instructive Sermon from the 24th Chapter of St. Matthew, v. 44.—Therefore be ye also ready: for in such hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh. Not forgetting to put the flock, with good judgment, in remembrance of those mournful things which he had more fully expatiated upon in the morning duty, while at the same time he laboured to establish their admonitory and saving influence in the hearts of all; and thus closing the solemn and impressive services of the day.
