

The hostile positions of the Russian and Turkish armies seem to have undergone no other changes, than that which continual reinforcements and mutual and increasing confidence in the result of the approaching conflict, would naturally produce.

The Speech of the Duke of Wellington, copied in this number, on the state of Ireland and in justification of the course lately adopted and successfully completed by His Majesty's Government, will be found extremely interesting, notwithstanding the excitement on the subject it refers to is evidently fast subsiding. By that Speech also, such of our readers as may not have seen it before, will be enabled to view the recent measures in a light somewhat different from that which our previous extracts on the subject could, we think, have enabled them to do; which has been the chief reason of our transcribing it.

HALIFAX, MAY 26.

A conflagration has taken place in Prince Edward Island, attended with circumstances of a most painful and melancholy nature. On Wednesday evening a House occupied by the family of Captain STEWART of the Royal Artillery, that gentleman having just left home for this garrison where he is stationed, was discovered to be on fire. The rapidity of the flames was such as to preclude the possibility of saving the building; and after ascertaining, as was supposed, that the children were safe, Mrs. STEWART retired in a state easily to be conceived, to a neighbouring house. She had previously, we understand, examined the bed in which a little daughter of nine years of age usually slept, and finding it vacant, felt assured that she had been removed. Unfortunately, however, the child had been placed in another room; and a terrific shriek, when too late, announced to those who had assembled, the perilous situation of the infant. To save her at this period was impossible; but a brother named Hugh, about 12 years of age, immediately penetrated the blazing building, and was extricated by persons from without. Prompted by feelings of affection for a favourite sister, and actuated by a desperate heroism above his years, and which, had he been spared, would have rendered him an ornament to his country in after life, he evaded the watchfulness of his preservers, again dashed into the House, and the falling in of the roof terminated the existence of these interesting innocents.

Any attempt to administer consolation to the distressed parents of these ill-fated beings, would be premature and unavailing. Time alone can alleviate their woes and soothe their sorrows, under the guidance of that Being, who in his inscrutable wisdom has permitted this visitation; but who in hours of deepest affliction, and in moments of the most cheerless despondence and intense gloom, can shed a ray of light and peace upon the disordered and distracted mind, and point to scenes of happiness hereafter.

Married.
