FAMINE IN IRELAND. From the London Globe, March 24. At one o'clock this afternoon a public meeting took place in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion house, for the purpose of raising a subscription, and devising temporary measures. calculated to avert from certain districts in Ireland the dire and pressing calamities of famine and disease, under which they are now suffer-

The Lord Mayor took the chair, and was supported and surrounded by the city members, several of the court of Aldermen, and a number of wealthy commercial gentlemen. From the lateness of the hour we are unable to give a detailed report of the speeches. It must suffice to say that each expressed the sincerest sympathy with the sufferers, and the most ardent zeal to alleviate their distress. The first resolution was moved by John Smith,

Numerous subscriptions were announced from time to time, as the business proceeded, and there can be no doubt but that the meeting will be the cause of procuring powerful aid to these distressed sufferers.

Many amusing scenes were exhibited in the height of the late demands for gold at the banks in Limerick. The country people were, of course, the urgent and almost only applicants. One of the lads in the bank, seizing a fire-shovel which was red-hot in a coal fire, brought out a lot of sovereigns on the burning metal, and threw them on the bank corner. The country fellows stared with surprise at the dazzling spectacle, and their astonishment was increased when the clerk exclaimed in a quick voice, "here, hovs, here they are, easy, and we'll coin enough of them for you." The pesantry, whose eyes spread upon the shining heap, actually imagined that there was a mint at full work at the bank, and it was amusing to see them dropping the heated sovereigns, which an instant before, they fingered with the cupidi ty of a miser.—Limerick Chronicle.

POLAND.

[From the Hamburg Reporter, March 28.] Our latest accounts from Warsaw are of the 22d instant, but contain nothing of interest. The Warsaw papers have lately come to an understanding with one another, to be extremely reserved in communicating any intelligence respecting the military operations of the different Polish corps; it having been found that the Russians were regularly and promptly supplied with the Warsaw papers by their secret agents in the city.

An active guerilla warfare continues, in the mean time, by which the Russian army must be dreadfully harrassed. A courier with dispatches from General Diebitsch was lately captured by one of the Polish free corps.

[From the Hamburg Reporter March 29.] The accounts from Warsaw reach to the 24th inst. A heavy cannonade has been heard in the direction of Ostrolenka. Report said, that a battle had been fought in that neighbourhood, the result of which had been unfavourable to the Russians .- Count Diebitsch
