

those Irish rebels. The constables also threw stones, and struck whom they could. Tracey's partisans would naturally return the stones. The soldiers appear to have divided into two, and halted opposite Dr. Robertson's house. The constables then fell back of the troops, and it was there the order to fire was given. It is very probable that the stones thrown at the constables hit the soldiers, but it has not appeared in evidence that one of the soldiers had received the least scratch, and it has not been shown that there was any design to assail the soldiers. We have measured the space between the places where the men fell and the stand of the soldiers; Chauvin fell at 579 feet; Langueville at 559 and Billel 675; taking the least distance it is clear that an individual cannot throw a stone that distance. I have only to add the Jury returned a verdict to day at half-past twelve, after being shut up 48 hours; (bread and water were given them yesterday,) and they have declared unanimously the deceased were killed by the soldiers commanded by Capt. Temple and Colonel McIntosh. Three of the Jury declare also, that the deceased were killed "in consequence of a riot." The coroner and several lawyers have decided the verdict sufficient to proceed to the arrest of Colonel McIntosh and Capt. Temple, who have given bail to appear Tuesday at 10 o'clock in the forenoon before the Judges, when it will be argued whether or not they can be admitted to bail. They gave bail themselves in a £1000 each, and the Hon. J. Forsyth and Samuel Gerrard £500 each. The Judges, it is understood, are in favour of admitting them to bail. Messrs. Quessell and O'Sullivan will appear for the crown, Mr. Sewell having given an opinion before the arrest of the accused.

The magistrates have had very frequent meetings on the subject. Some doubts having arisen as to the necessity of the verdict being unanimous, or of twelve persons at least, a petition is in circulation praying the Coroner to call a new Jury, and as the bodies are necessary for the purpose of a new verdict, they are guarded in the cemetery.

From the Record.

The Military were called on to disperse the mob—who were seen approaching towards the place where they were held in readiness, shouting and bellying in the most infuriated manner. On the approach of the military the mob fled down St. James' street, the military taking the same direction, headed by their commanding officer. About this time the stones again began to fly from the mob in the most dangerous manner, and as that part of the town has been recently macadamized, the mob had a plentiful supply of stones ready at hand, which, we lament to say, they used with dreadful dexterity. Col. Macintosh and several of the other officers and men were struck, the former very severely. Still, the utmost exertions—the most persading entreaties were used both by Col. Macintosh, the Magistrates, and those in authority, to prevail on the misguided and infuriated mob to disperse—but to no effect. The stones and other missiles continued to be thrown, and several persons were knocked down before our eyes. At length the fatal word was given, FIRE! and in another moment four persons were lying dead in the streets, and several wounded. One of them a young man not more than 15 or 16 years of age. The mob then fled. The military taking up a position at the head of St. James' street, adjoining the Hay Market, under a most drenching rain. On our return through St. James' street, we observed the flag ways literally strewn with stones, which had been thrown by the mob at the military. What shall we—or what can we add to the above. Were we to give an opinion of our own, we would be charged perhaps as partisans. God knows that we have but little of it in our composition.

No blame can possibly attach to the Military; nevertheless men act more calmly. With outstretched arms, we observed Col. Macintosh and the magistrates, entreating of the mob to disperse. We would only add our prayer, that this may be the last bloodshed we may have to witness for many years to come on any similar occasion—but really when men of any persuasion, will be blinded, and allow their passions to take possession of their reason—awful as may be the example—such examples are sometimes merited in disguise. The peace must be preserved—and will be—even at such an immense cost."

The poll continued open till five o'clock, at which hour it was closed. Shortly after it was closed, (a point on which it is very desirable to prevent the misrepresentations of designing persons) a scene of violence ensued, which beggars all description. The special constables were fallen upon by the Tracey mob, and many Irish, who had retired to a short distance with their notable Demagogues, were seen to return in haste, and joining with the rest, drove back the constables, whom they assaulted in a brutal and infuriated manner. At this moment the military moved forward from their previous retirement; and several persons having been taken in the act of riot and assault, were carried to jail; when the magistrates and Colonel Macintosh used every praiseworthy and earnest exertion to persuade the mob to desist from further violence, and retire to their homes. The only reply was, shouts, hisses and opprobrious language, accompanied by showers of stones, (some of them of great weight) which were thrown with violence by the rioters, at the magistrates and the military. The forbearance of the officers and the troops, under the complicated provocation of insult, violence, and a drenching rain, was truly admirable—a calm good humoured smile (which might, perhaps, conceal their contempt) sat upon the countenances of the men, and Colonel Macintosh endeavoured, with soothing and condescending language, to avert the exercise of a painful though imperative duty. The Colonel received two very severe blows from stones, one on the breast, and the other on the head. Two other officers were also struck by stones, and almost every man in the front rank. At last the increasing numbers and violence displayed the dread necessity of some more imposing arguments, and the word was given to fire!
