The last Quarterly Review, we are sorry to perceive, is intensely severe upon Sir John Ross and his book. The article however, we were prepared for, as we could pretty well guess the opinion of Mr. Barrow, who is the writer of it. Sir John Ross has been rather anxious to show that no practical passage exists; and after his discovery of what he terms the "Boothia peninsula," he boldly affirmed that no passage existed south of latitude 74. Now this was a hazardous assertion to make before the result of Captain Back's discoveries were ascertained, and we should not be surprised, although we have no authority for saying so, if Captain Back were to offer an opinion directly at variance with the other navigator. Captain Back would make no communication on this point, nor would he say in what latitude the Great Fish River disembogued into the polar ocean; but we will put a case hypothetically to those who have studied this subject, and ask them the following question—Suppose Captain Back found the before mentioned river to reach the polar sea a long way south of Sir John Ross's Boothia Isthmus, and that he found the current setting easterly towards the southern extremity of Prince Regent's Inlet, which Sir John, be it observed, did not examine—what becomes of his assertion that no passage exists south of latitude 74?—New York Tribune.

THE CANADAS.—By the late meeting of the Council, at which Sir George Grey, one of the Canada Commissioners, was sworn in. After that Gentleman had taken the oaths, His Majesty took the constitutional and wise though of late unusual course for the King, to address the Commissioner at some length upon the nature of the duties he was to discharge. If we are rightly informed, he pointed out to Sir George Grey how far his line of duty was marked out in his oath, and then reminding the Commissioner that the Canadas had been won by British valour—had been bought with British blood—had been improved and enlarged at the expense of this country—warned him that these provinces must not be lost or given away. "Remember, Sir," said His Majesty, "in words which we believe we quote literally—"Remember, Sir, these Provinces must not be lost or given away."—WHATEVER OTHERS MAY SAY TO YOU, I tell you this—the Canadas must not be lost or given away.—London Standard.

Presentation of Plate.—The cabin passengers by the packet ship Columbus, Capt. N. Cobb, invited that experienced and highly respected navigator to favour them with his company to dinner, on Saturday last, at the Adelphi Hotel. The cloth having been removed, Captain Cobb, of the 34th Regiment, in a neat and appropriate speech, presented Captain Cobb with a superb gold snuff box, as a token of their sense of his skill as a navigator, and his politeness and hospitality as a gentleman, during their remarkably quick passage from New York. Captain Cobb received the splendid present, worth thirty guineas, with becoming feeling, and returned thanks for so valuable a token of the esteem of his passengers, in brief but expressive terms.—Liverpool Journal.

We understand that the University of Oxford has conferred on the Rev. Dr. Chalmers the degree of LL. D.: so that the Dr., in addition to D. D., is now LL. D., and member of the French Institute—literary honors which, we suppose, never before met in the person of a Scottish clergyman.—Glasgow Guardian.

A very melancholy occurrence took place on board his Majesty's ship Melville, when off the Cape of Good Hope, on the 30th of April last, by which two Lieutenants (J. L. Fitzgerald and J. Gore) and eight seamen perished in the vain attempt to save the life of a man who had fallen overboard. What renders the circumstance the more distressing is the fact that the Admiral (Sir G. Gore) was a witness to the loss of his only son in his daring and humane attempt to save a fellow creature; and the gallant officer has received so severe a shock as to be hardly yet recovered.

The cholera was raging frightfully at Toulon, and very melancholy details are given in the papers.

The Lawrence Gallery.—The second exhibition of the sketches by the old masters, of Sir Thomas Lawrence's collection, commences this day for the public. As the last consisted of works by Rubens, so this is made up of a hundred drawings by Rembrandt and Vandyke. Those by the great Dutch artist are the finer of the two, and are some of them exquisite specimens, the very essence of his style. They are for the most part in bistre, aided by the pen, and have so much force and purity in their chiaroscuro, that they seem in no way inferior to the oils. Amongst them may be seen the sketch of the Adoration of the Shepherds and The Woman taken in Adultery, which are in the National Gallery. Great numbers of Rembrandt's most meaning pen sketches, or rather scratches, are to be found in this collection. The Vandykes are not equally choice when compared to the works of that graceful and tasteful pencil. There are, however, some beautiful portrait drawings amongst them, and also a few very superior fancy subjects.

Among other strangers attracted to London in the hopes of fame and profit, we may mention a M. Sadre, who visits England with the purpose of bringing before the public a very ingenious system of conveying intelligence by means of the seven primitive musical sounds. He has invented a system, in which these are employed to represent the four-and-twenty letters of the alphabet, and, of course, to be combined in words or sentences of any length. We had an opportunity, a few evenings ago, of seeing his invention fully tested, and are satisfied that, in theory at least, it is thoroughly efficient. It is his purpose to apply it to telegraphic communications in all cases where vision is interrupted, and the thing is worthy of the careful examination of all who are curious in such matters. Is not some plan hinted at in the Marquis of Worcester's "Century of Inventions?"—Athenaeum.

SWAN RIVER.—Attack on the Natives.—An expedition had been sent against the natives on the Murray, who had been for some time the terror of the neighbourhood. Many atrocities had been committed by them, and at length it was resolved they should not go on with impunity. A party accordingly, consisting of His Excellency Sir James Stirling, Mr. Peel, Mr. Roe, Captain Mears and his son, Captain Ellis, Mr. Norcott, Mr. Sawyer Smith, a party of the police, two corporals, and eight privates of his Majesty's 21st Regiment, amounting altogether to 25 men, set out to attack them.

The party bivouacked at a place called Jimam by the natives, about 11 miles from the mouth of the Murray, and on the following morning the whole encampment marched for Pinjarra, another place of resort for the natives of this district, where it was intended to establish a town, on a site reserved for the purpose, and to leave half the party, including the military, for the protection of Mr. Peel and such other settlers as that gentleman might induce to resort thither. From this an easterly course was taken, for the purpose of looking over the adjoining country; but the party had not proceeded more than a quarter of a mile over an undulating surface of the richest description, covered with nutritious food for the cattle, when the voices of many natives were heard from the left. This being a neighbourhood much frequented by the native tribe of Kalyute, long unchecked in the commission of numerous outrages and murders, and which had hitherto eluded pursuit, since the murder of private Nisbett, of the 21st Regiment, and spearing Mr. Barron, it was resolved to proceed against them. His Excellency, with Messrs. Peel and Norcott, rode forward, to ascertain whether it was the guilty tribe, which being ascertained, the police advanced. The instant they were observed, the natives, to the number of 70, darted on their feet, seized their spears, and formed a formidable front; but finding their visitors still advancing, they were seized with fear, and began to retreat, when the little party of horse, consisting of five persons, dashed into the midst of them, recognising some of the most atrocious offenders among them. One of these was celebrated for his audacity, named Noonarr, who on being named, boldly avowed himself, exclaiming, "Yes, Noonarr, me," prepared to hurl his spear at Mr. Norcott; who, however, shot him dead in the act. The natives upon this turned to assail their attackers, and the latter commenced a general firing. The first shot and the loud yells of the savages having apprised the rest of the party of the attack, they, under the command of Sir J. Stirling, hurried to the aid of their comrades, and arrived just as some of the natives had crossed and others were crossing the river, with the intention of surrounding the settlers. Astounded at the approach of this second party, who were in the rear, they fled to the river, secreting themselves among the branches and holes, immersing themselves with only the head uncovered, and ready with their spears under water to seize every advantage. The settlers, however, acted with great steadiness, and the result was that from 25 to 30 of the savages were slain, and the remainder fled, with the exception of eight women and some children, who, on being assured of protection, were detained prisoners. One, however, and several of the children were unfortunately killed during the engagement. As it appeared by this time that sufficient punishment had been inflicted, and as among the dead 15 very old and desperate offenders were recognized, the bugle was sounded to cease firing, and the party re-assembled at the ford, where the baggage had been left under charge of four soldiers. Here Captain Ellis had arrived, badly wounded in the right temple by a spear, at three or four yards distance, which knocked him off his horse, and Heffron, a constable of police, had been badly wounded in the elbow.

The settlement continued to be affected with a scarcity of provisions.—Beef and mutton was 1s 6d. per lb; the 4lb. loaf 2s. 2d.; Sydney cheese, 2s. per lb.; of rice there was none; potatoes were 6d. per lb.; and tea, 8s. 6d. All kinds of spirituous and other liquors were to be had in abundance, and at cheap rates.—Robert Town paper.

ALBION COAL MINE IN PICTOU.—The village of Pictou forms a link between its foreign and domestic trade; as at this place, all the entrances and clearances are made; and in some measure the place owes its present condition to the enterprise of the Mining Association, although it has not repeated the benefit therefrom in a general point of view that circumstances would have warranted the anticipation of. In front of the town is a broad and extensive harbour, in which ships of the largest class and almost any number, can lay at anchor with perfect safety. Vessels which arrive for the purpose of taking in a cargo of coal are required to come to abreast of the town, and an officer is at once at hand who takes an account of goods on board; after which the vessel is entered at the Custom House, when she proceeds a mile up the east river, to what is termed the "loading ground," where the ballast is discharged and the coal taken on board, at the rate of eighty chaldrons per day. The coal is taken on board of launches or lighters, at the village of Glasgow, about 8 miles from Pictou, and brought down the east river to the before mentioned place. These boats contain from forty to eighty chaldrons each, and are towed to, and from Glasgow by steam-boat employed expressly for the purpose. The coal is taken from the mine to Glasgow on cars or trolleys, which are in constant operation upon a rail road, one and a half mile in length. The greatest depth to which the mine has been worked is 259 feet, and is called the mother or main shaft, in which a pump is operated by a steam engine for the purpose of taking the water from the pits. After the water is raised to the surface, a small portion of the column is permitted again to descend the shaft, which causes a rush of pure air to descend, as a vacuum is formed by the falling of the water, which must of course be supplied by air. This can be distinctly felt at a considerable distance from the shaft, and is rendered of incalculable benefit in purifying the air, which otherwise would soon become incapable of sustaining respiration. The same engine takes the coal from the different pits to the surface of the earth, when they are placed on cars and carried by horses to different parts of the premises. The pits or shafts which are worked are four in number, 10 feet high and 18 feet wide. The workmen are employed by the piece, or have to excavate a certain amount of coal per day, which is measured off by the foreman. These pits contain twenty-four rooms or boards, and each board is worked by three miners; each shaft branches off in different directions the same as roads or streets, and each of these branches is called a board. The coal is taken to the bottom of the pits upon trolleys, and from thence as before named. From the bottom of the lowermost pit to the bottom of the climbing shaft is six hundred feet, on an inclined plane; and from the bottom of the climbing shaft to the top is thirty-six feet. It is provided with good stairs for descending and ascending. There is also a shaft which can be descended on horseback, and extends about a quarter of a mile, which distance renders it very easy of ascent. Two hundred and fifty men are employed in and upon the works, and sixteen horses in the mine. From each pit is turned out 30 chaldrons per day, which makes from the four 120 chaldrons daily. The workmen appear cheerful, contented and healthy. At the present time the Association have about 40,000 chaldrons excavated and ready for market. The greatest amount ever shipped in one year was 14,000 chaldrons, which will leave a large balance on hand, unless the demand increases with rapidity.—Warren (R. L.) Star.
