On Tuesday began the holiday keeping with the grand military spectacle. We grieve to find that the ceremony was interrupted by a tragedy of extraordinary character.

The muster of the legions was observed to be greater than at any time since August 1830, in the first flush of the revolution. In terms of the prescribed itinerary, the King left the Tuilleries at nine o'clock, accompanyed by the Duke of Orleans, who had returned from Switzerland expressly for the purpose of assisting in the celebration of the present anniversary, and followed by a numerous and brilliant staff, consisting of all the field-marshal and general officers at present in Paris. He had reviewed all the troops in the Champs Elysees to the Barrier de l'Etoile, and at eleven o'clock returned to the starting point at the junction of the Rue de la Paix with the boulevard du Temple, and from thence he proceeded with the inspection, still keeping to the right side of the road as far as the other extremity of the line near the Bastille, when a loud explosion was heard. It proceeded from a small window in the second story, about twenty feet from the ground, over a wine-shop of the lowest order, opposite the Jardinaire. The Marshal Duke of Treviso (Mortier) fell dead. He was close to the King's side. The King's horse was wounded, and several officers and some of the lookers-on were killed.

The effect of this unexpected event is indescribable, and a general panic and stupor seized upon all those present. As soon as the first symptoms of surprise had ceased, the principal object of attention was to ascertain if the person of the King had escaped. His Majesty was on horseback; neither he himself nor any of the princes were wounded; but the deaths of Marshal Mortier, Col. Reusser, three grenadiers of the 1st legion of the national guard, a lieutenant-colonel of the line, and two men and a woman among the crowd, showed the deadly intent of the assassins, and the narrow escape of the King and his sons. The moment the cause of confusion was understood, shouts were heard of "Vive le Roi!"
"A bas les assassins!" "Vive la ligne!"
"Vive la garde nationale!" The police rushed into the wine-house, and arrested twelve persons among whom was a mechanic, named Girard, who confessed that he had prepared the battery, which consisted of several musket barrels, tied together, and fastened to a board; that he was sure of his mark; but some of the barrels burst, and shattered his face and hands dreadfully, and three barrels did not go off at all. He declared himself the author of the crime, but firmly denied that he had any accessories. The Generals, Pellet, Klein, Aymes, and Colbert, with a captain of the national guards, several officers and civilians, were severely wounded. All the dead and dying were taken to the Cafe Turc, and received every attention. The King, whose arm was slightly grazed, and his horse wounded, rode up to the house whence the explosion of the internal machine had been heard, and continued five hours on horseback after the event. He then paid a visit of condolence to the widow of Marshal Mortier, and at night presided at a state banquet. His courage and presence of mind were admired by every one; and the effect of the horrid attempt at assassination may be guessed from the fact that as the cortege passed on along the lines, the King exhibiting his dress stained with blood, and pointing to his sons, one of whom, the Duke of Orleans, bore on his sword the hat of the late marshal, which was also stained with his blood, the sensation of loyalty was stronger than it had been felt in France for many years. Two white hats were found in the room of the assassin, who yet denied that he had any accomplices.
Each barrel [there were 25 in all] of the infernal machine was loaded with six balls, and the explosion of five of them so seriously injured the assassin himself, that his life is endangered, yet he made vigorous efforts to escape.

FESTIVITIES AT QUEBEC.

On Thursday night, the Fete Cham-petre given by the Attorney General and Mrs. Ogden to Lord and Lady Aylmer, and which was postponed from the previous day on account of the weather, took place at Kilgraston Lodge, near this city, the summer residence of the learned gentleman, and from the taste displayed in fitting up the pavilion raised for the occasion, as well as the whole arrangements of the entertainment, surpassed any thing of the kind which has ever been given in Canada.

The Lodge having no room of sufficient size to receive so numerous a company, a temporary pavilion, eighty feet by forty, had been erected immediately in front, so as to render the accommodation of the house available for the purposes of the evening. The approach was lighted by coloured lamps, disposed of firs and other evergreens planted for the occasion, and over the entrance porch, the word ALEXER was displayed in variegated lamps, which at a distance, appeared a perfect blaze of light. From the porch a flight of steps led to the division of the pavilion set apart for dancing, which was elegantly dressed with various national colours, amongst these were the Royal Standard and Union of England, in close position with the Stripes and Stars of America, forming the roof, and covering also a part of the apartment: the Royal Standards of Portugal and Spain formed the partition, which divided the supper room from the dancing saloon, and the Standard of Brazil was also displayed in another part of the drapery. At the head of the room was raised a platform ascended by three steps, the whole covered with crimson cloth, and on it were placed a sofa and chairs, covered with velvet of the same rich hue for the accommodation of the noble guests, and their immediate party. In rear of the sofa, supported by two pillars, wreathed with artificial flowers, was a well executed transparency of Lord Aylmer's arms, the whole forming a throne, and giving a handsome appearance to that end of the apartment, which was splendidly illuminated by a profusion of wax lights in chandeliers suspended from the centre of the roof. At the lower extremity and opposite to the entrance an orchestra was formed, in the verandah of the Lodge, the front of which was decorated with evergreens, and from this the band of the 66th Regiment continued throughout the evening, to play their choicest quadrilles and other music suited to dancing, directed by the excellent taste of their master, Mr. Zeigler. The passage to the dwelling was at the end of the music gallery, and led to the apartments in which refreshments were served and card tables set out. Shortly after nine o'clock a salvo of rockets announced the arrival of Lord and Lady Aylmer, who were conducted to the throne at the head of the room by their host and hostess, and having taken their seats and received the compliments of the company, dancing commenced, in good old English style, with a country dance, which was followed by quadrilles and waltzes and kept up by great spirit till one o'clock, when the curtain which concealed the entrance to the supper room was drawn up and the company were ushered into an apartment of a delightfully cool temperature, on three sides of which in banquet form, were disposed tables, profusely covered with every delicacy of the season, which could be procured within the Province or brought from the neighbouring States so far south as New York; as many of the guests as could find room were promptly ranged at the tables. We should have said that the walls of this room were also covered with an arras of colours, principally the British Union, but there was no awning or canopy, so that it had the advantage of the whole height of the roof, the rafters of which were interwoven with branches of pine that had a cool and refreshing appearance. This as well as the dancing room, was admirably lighted, both by lamps suspended from above and placed upon the tables, together with numerous branches containing wax lights. Indeed we have seldom seen an entertainment in which this very essential point was so successfully managed. After supper His Excellency Lord Aylmer proposed the health of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden, which was drunk with sincere satisfaction and a general acknowledgement of the attention every individual present received from the warmhearted host and hostess. After a short time Lord Aylmer and most of the dancers repaired to the ball room.

The Attorney General then returned to the supper room and gave the health of Lord and Lady Aylmer in a bumper, a toast in which all heartily joined, and which honored with three times three, and one cheer more, given in a manner that proved the cheering was not merely of the voice, but from the heart.

The supper room was, however, soon abandoned, and the dance resumed with unabated vigour, till the ruddy streaks in the East warned the company, that busy day was returning.
The company then began to separate, the Noble guests remaining till the last, lest their departure might be taken as a signal for breaking up of a party in which mirth and hilarity ruled with undisputed sway. Amongst the strangers were several members of the Clinton and Livingston families, from the United States, Colonel Balfour, late Lieutenant Governor of the Bahamas, Captain Strong and those Officers of His Majesty's ship Belvidera, who could be spared from duty, and several families and individuals from Montreal.—Quebec Mercury.

From the Quebec Gazette.

Lieutenant General Lord Aylmer and Lady Aylmer, will not sail, we believe, till about the close of next week.
Capt. Doyle, and Lieut. Col. Craig, Lady and family, will also go home in the Pique, Capt. Doyle having a leave of absence from his regiment of fifteen months.

The Hon. Peter McGill, President of the St. Andrew's Society, has received a letter from the Earl of Dalhousie, in which his Lordship expresses a warm interest in the Society, and a desire to be enrolled a Member of it.

His Lordship says, "that he will consider it the greatest obligation, if it can be pointed out to him in which way he can, as an individual, be of service to it, "being a Scotchman in heart and soul."

The French have met with a serious defeat, in the neighbourhood of Algiers, from a body of Arabs. Five hundred of the former were slain, and the whole of their baggage fell into the hands of the enemy. Immediately on learning the defeat, Government ordered Marshal Clausel, to depart for Algiers, to assume the chief command.

The French Government have offered a reward of twenty thousand dollars, for the discovery and rescue of the officers and crew of a brig, which sailed a few years ago on an expedition to the northern seas, and has never since been heard of.

Lord Aylmer, it is said, will have the command of the Forces in Ireland.

The English Mail for August reached this place on Saturday last. Our London files are down to the 6th of that month. We have also been positely favoured with Falmouth papers to the 8th ultimo, from which we have selected the most prominent articles of European news, which will be found to possess much interest.

Agreeably to the General Order of the 18th May last, the First Battalion of York County Militia is summoned to assemble at the usual place on the 23d September instant. The muster of this Corps on the present occasion will be rendered doubly interesting by the arrival last week of a splendid stand of Colours from London. We understand Lady CAMPBELL has kindly condescended to present the Colours to the Battalion on that day, who, with His Excellency and Suite, will be present during this solemn and interesting ceremonial.— Great preparations are being made to honor the day with every mark of loyalty and patriotic feeling; and, we trust, that the Corps, to a man, will assemble, and evince that orderly and good conduct for which they have invariably been distinguished.

Fredericton, Sept. 7, 1835.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Management for the New Brunswick Baptist Education Society, held on the 8d September, 1835, the following Resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That public notice be immediately given, that the Seminary now being erected at Fredericton, will be opened on Monday, the 4th of January next.

That the rate of Tuition be fixed at from £3 to £5 per annum; Board, Lodging and Washing, at 7s. 6d. per week, making with the deduction of eight weeks vacation £16 10s. per annum; so that the whole expense of Tuition, Board, &c. will amount to £19 10s. at the lowest, and £21 10s. at the highest, per annum, without any other extra charges, except that the Scholars provide their own Bedding and proportion of Fuel in the School Rooms.

That as a part of the Building has been prepared for the accommodation of Female Classes, a competent person be procured to take charge of the same, and arrangements made in the Preceptor's apartments for those who may prefer boarding in the Seminary.
That no charges will be required from those who do not Board in the Building, except for Tuition and Fuel.

Persons wishing to be admitted at the opening of the Institution, or Parents who intend to have their children admitted at that time, will please give information of the same as early as possible to the Secretary of the Committee.
