Selected.

From the Boston Journal.

[The following beautiful effusion, remarkable for its simplicity as well as its pathos, we extract from the last number of Blackwood's Magazine.]

THE FAIRY'S BURIAL.

Where shall our sister rest?
Where shall we bury her?
To the grave's silent breast
Soon we must hurry her!
Gone is the beauty now
From her cold bosom!
Down drops her livid brow
Like a wan blossom!

Not to those white lips cling
Smiles or caresses!
Dull is the rainbow wing,
Dim the bright tresses!
Death now hath claimed his spoil—
Fling the pall over her!
Lap we earth's lightest soil,
Wherewith to cover her!

Where, down in yonder vale
Lilies are growing,
Mourners the pure and pale,
Sweet tears testowing!
Morning and evening dew
Will they shed o'er her;
Each night their task renews
How to deplore her!

Here let the fern grass grow,
With its green drooping!
Let the narcissus blow,
O'er the wave stooping;
Let the brook wander by,
Mournfully sighing!
Let the wind murmur high,
Sad echoes bringing!

And when the moonbeams shower
Tender and holy,
Light on the haunted hour
Which is ours solely,
Then we will seek the spot
Where thou art sleeping,
Holding thee unforget
With our long weeping!

"What is that to thee—follow me."
John xxi. 22.

Doth dark despondence seize thy mind,
When adverse winds prevail—
As though the guardian care of Heaven
In faithfulness could fail?
Fearing thou the want of earthly good?
God will provide it:
The ark of promise is his own,
His hand shall guide it.

Doth vain philosophy intrude,
By pride and error bred!
Do doubt, and unbelief, and pain,
In her chill footsteps tread?
Cling they around the cross of Christ,
That hope to dim?
What has thy fate to do with these!
Follow thou him.

That voice which once to Peter spake
The grave rebuke, divine;
And bore repentance to his soul,
A message hath for thine:
"What is this brief and pageant world,
Spirit, to thee?"
High heir of everlasting life,
Follow thou me."

MISCELLANEOUS.

SINGULAR ADVENTURES OF A FEMALE SAILOR.

The following adventures of a young female, the subject of the present article, are so truly genuine, and so extraordinarily marvellous, that we cannot refrain from recommending the perusal of them to the attention of our readers. An incorrect statement of the facts appeared in the papers during the early part of the week, but the annexed account being publicly adduced before the Lord Mayor, leaves no doubt as to its authenticity. His lordship having read the statement, directed M'Lean, the inspector of the city police, to make inquiry into the circumstances, in order that, if the girl required assistance, it might be rendered to her without subjecting her to annoyance. M'Lean thought that the best thing he could do, after having heard the story of the girl from her own lips, was to bring her to the Mansion-house, and introduce her to his lordship. He accordingly appeared before the Lord Mayor, accompanied by the girl, the captain of the vessel in which she came to London, and several gentlemen who felt an interest in the remarkable details of the case.

Captain M'Entire, of the Sarah, from Belfast, stated that he met the girl, whose name is Anna Jane Thornton, at St. Andrews, in North America. She was dressed in sailor's clothes and had all the appearance of having been brought up to that employment. He engaged her at nine dollars a month, to act as cook and steward, and considered that she was what she seemed to be until a few days before the arrival of the vessel into the port of London. It appeared that some of the crew had suspected her, before she was seen washing in her birth, from the circumstance of her having repeatedly refused to drink grog.

The Lord Mayor.—It has been reported that she was ill-treated by her captain and crew. I wish particularly to be informed upon that point.

Captain M'Entire said that he would call upon the girl to say whether he had not uniformly treated her with kindness, and whether, when her sex was discovered, the degree of kindness and care was not increased?

The girl declared that Captain M'Entire had acted towards her with humanity, and had desired her to complain to him if any of the crew treated her harshly. She had been, in the course of the voyage, struck by some of the sailors, because she could not work as hard as they did—a thing she found it difficult to do in a gale of wind; but she did not tell the captain, as she determined to endure without grumbling.

The Lord Mayor.—Is it possible that this mere girl—for she cannot be more than sixteen or seventeen years of age—performed the duties of a seaman?

Captain M'Entire.—It is, my lord. She performed them to admiration. She would run up to hand the topgallant-sail in any sort of weather, and we had a severe passage. Poor girl, she had a hard time of it! She suffered greatly from the wet, but she bore it excellently well; and was a capital seaman.

The Lord Mayor.—Is the account of the romantic pursuit of the person she was said to be attached to correct? Is it true that she went to America after the captain that was said to be her sweetheart?

M'Lean said that the account she had given to him corresponded with that which appeared before the public, but she would herself mention the particulars.

Captain M'Entire stated that he had no doubt of the correctness of her statement.—She was not at all given to loquacity; on the contrary, she did the duty of a seaman without a murmur, and had infinitely a better use of her hands than her tongue.

The description of the female sailor seemed to be accurate. Her hands appeared as if they were covered with thick brown leather gloves, and it was by repeated questioning the Lord Mayor got from her the facts of which the following is the substance—

Anna Jane Thornton stated that she is in the seventeenth year of her age, her father, who is now a widower, took her and the rest of his family from Gloucestershire, where she was born, to Donegal, when she was six years old. He was the owner of stores in that part of Ireland, and in good circumstances, and was always affectionate to her. She regretted that she had quitted her home; for her departure, of which she had given no previous notice to her father, must have caused him many a sorrowful hour. When she was only thirteen years old, she met Captain Alexander Burke, whose father resided in New York and was the owner of vessels there; and before she was fifteen they became strongly attached to each other. Soon afterwards Aleck Burke was obliged to go to New York, and she took the resolution to follow him. She quitted her father's house, accompanied by a maid servant and a boy, and having procured a cabin boy's dress, she exerted herself to obtain a passage to America. She succeeded in her object. The servant maid and boy took leave of her immediately upon her embarking, the latter being charged with a message to her father, informing him of her intention. By degrees she became reconciled to the labours of her new employment, but she beheld with joy the shores of New York, where she thought her labours would terminate. The moment she landed she went off, in her cabin boy's dress, to the house of Capt. Burke's father, and said that she had worked under the captain's orders and wished to be engaged by him again. It was by the father of the young man she was informed of the event which placed the eternal barrier between them, and she retired from the house disconsolate. America was, however, no place in which to look for sympathies. In the belief that the sea, which no doubt her feelings of affection for Burke recommended to her, was a more probable mode of existence than any she could adopt in the dress of her sex, she applied for and obtained a situation as cook and steward in the Adelaide, and subsequently in the Rover, in which latter vessel she sailed to St. Andrews, where she fell in with Capt. M'Entire. The captain of the Rover had engaged to take her to Belfast, but he received an order from the owners to sail for the West Indies; and as she was resolved to return to her father as soon as possible, she refused to accompany him. For 31 months she had been engaged in these remarkable adventures, and participated in the most severe toils of the crews, of which she formed a part.

The Lord Mayor.—And are you not weary of so harassing a life?

The girl.—Yes I am anxious to get home. I hope and believe that my father will forgive me for the sorrow I have caused him. I have had my own sorrows too.

Captain M'Entire.—I am anxious to pay her the wages I owe her, and I never had any idea of giving her less than I agreed to pay.

The Lord Mayor.—How did it happen that you fancied the sailor's dress, well knowing that by assuming the appearance of one you pledged yourself to perform such terrible duties?

The girl.—I could not think of any other way and I did the duties as well as I could. I underwent a good deal. I travelled from Eastport, in North America, to St. Andrews, by myself, a distance of 70 miles, through the woods. I walked all the way.

The Lord Mayor.—And without sustaining any injury?

The girl.—I received none. I knew the sailor's clothes would carry me through safe, and at St. Andrews I met Capt. M'Entire.

Captain M'Entire.—It was but a few days ago I learned that we had a girl on board. I was the last person in the vessel who was informed of the fact, and I could scarcely credit the mate when he told me of it. I can bear testimony to the extraordinary propriety of her conduct, and I ask her again whether I have not acted properly towards her, and particularly from the moment I became acquainted with the secret which she was so anxious not to have disclosed.

The girl said that she was in gratitude bound to acknowledge the kindness and humanity of the captain, who instantly paid her all that was due to her.

The Lord Mayor.—I shall give directions that you be taken care of until I hear from your father, to whom I shall write to-night. You have done him great wrong by abandoning him under any pretence, but you have suffered bitterly for your disobedience, and I trust that you will, by your future attention and care, prove to him that your filial affection is as strong as your courage in such circumstances of danger and toil as you have been placed in has been so immeasurably beyond that of the rest of your sex of modern days. Many gentlemen to whom I have spoken on the subject looked upon the case as the coinage of the brain, but the investigation has, if possible, added to the interest of the story.

Captain M'Entire mentioned to the Lord Mayor that the proprietor of the Coopers' Arms in Lower Thames street, where the young woman was lodged, is a respectable person, in whose house she would be properly taken care of, and his lordship desired that she should remain in that asylum.

The girl then retired, after having gratefully acknowledged her thanks for the humanity and solicitude of the Lord Mayor. She is low of stature, and her limbs are very firmly knit together—her face is comely—her eyes are dark and brilliant, and her teeth are extremely white. The hardships to which she has been so long exposed have completely tanned her face and neck, but the sailor who accidentally discovered her sex declares that the natural color of her skin is as white as snow.

—A RABBIT ONCE told me of an ingenious invention, which in the Talmud is attributed to Solomon; and this story shows that there are some pleasing tales in that immense compilation.

The power of the monarch had spread his wisdom to the remotest parts of the known world. Queen Sheba, attracted by the splendour of his reputation, visited this poetical king at his own court; there, one day to exercise the sagacity of the monarch, Sheba presented herself at the foot of the throne; in each hand she held a wreath; the one was composed of natural, the other of artificial flowers.

Art, in the labour of the mimetic wreath, had exquisitely emulated the lively hues of nature; so that at the distance it was held by the queen for the inspection of the king, it was deemed impossible for him to decide, as her question imported, which wreath was the production of nature, and which the work of art. The sagacious Solomon seemed perplexed; yet to be vanquished, though in a trifle, by a trifling woman, irritated his pride. The son of David, he who had written treatises on the vegetable productions "from the cedar to the hyssop," to acknowledge himself outwitted by a woman, with shreds of paper and glazed paintings! The honor of the monarch's reputation for divine sagacity seemed diminished, and the whole Jewish court looked solemn and melancholy. At length an expedient presented itself to the king, and it must be confessed worthy of the naturalist. Observing a cluster of bees hovering about a window, he commanded that it should be opened; it was opened; the bees rushed into the court, and alighted immediately on one of the wreaths, while not a single one was fixed on the other. The baffled Sheba had one more reason to be astonished at the wisdom of Solomon.

This would make a pretty poetical tale. It would yield an elegant description and a pleasing moral; that the bee only rests on the natural beauties, and never fixes on the painted flowers, however imitatively the colours may be laid on. Applied to the ladies, this would give it pungency. In the "Practical Education" of the Edgeworths, the reader will find a very ingenious conversation of the children about this story.
