PROGRESS OF THE WAR

[March 28 to April 3]

IN the week under review the chief interest in the hostilities again centred in the Western campaign, where the great German drive in Picardy was continued with diminishing force and success till it was completely arrested, for the present at least. At some points the Entente Allies were able to win back some of the positions lost. The fiercest of the fighting was southeast, east, and northeast of Amiens, to which the Germans were able to approach within six miles at one point; but the Allies were able to hold the town itself. There was also fierce fighting in the Arras sector, but the Germans, though in immense strength as they were over the whole extent of the drive, made only slight gains, most of which the Allies subsequently recovered. There was activity in the Verdun sector and at other points on the western front but no changes in positions resulted.

Little news was transmitted concerning military operations in the Russian campaign. No reports came to hand of the further advance of the Germans into Russian territory, and the news of the internal situation indicated that the Bolshevik government was gradually controlling the other factions and gaining supreme authority. In Finland the revolution continued in progress, but it was not apparent which side was gaining the upper hand. German troops were landed during the week; and it was also stated, though not confirmed, that Entente officers were assisting the Red Guards, as the Bolshevik troops are called. Finland may be the starting point of a new attack on the Germans by the Russians. Japan had not yet intervened in Siberia, and it was stated that the Japanese Government had declared its friendliness to the Bolshevik administration. There seemed to be something more than a ray of hope that Russia would soon again be in a position successfully to oppose German attempts at domination.

The situation in the Caucasus was even more difficult to understand, in view of the meagre information forthcoming during the week. The Georgians were said to have joined forces with the Armenians to resist any further encroachment of the Turks, so there is some hope of an improvement in that region.

From the Mesopotamian campaign came news of the capture by the British forces of Hit, an important settlement on the Euphrates, together with over 3000 Turkish prisoners and much military booty. This success will have far-reaching beneficial effects in the subsequent prosecution of the war.

In Palestine General Allenby's forces reached the Hedjaz Railway at Amman, and after destroying a considerable section of it they retired westward. They also made further progress to the north-west of Jerusalem.

There was activity in the Balkans, but no changes of positions resulted. No changes, or successes for either side, were reported in the Italian campaign, but there was an expectation of an impending Austrian drive in great force, for which the Italians were steadily preparing. The arrest—consequently the failure—of the German drive in Picardy may be the means of withholding altogether the threatened drive in Northern Italy. The truth is beginning to be realized throughout Germany and Austria-Hungary of the fearful loss of life involved in the Picardy drive, and the futility of it all.

The bombardment of Paris by the new long-range guns was continued, and one of the shells on Good Friday struck a church in the vicinity and killed seventy-five people and wounded ninety others, mostly women and children. Air raids were also made on Paris during the week and others were averted by the vigilance of the French aviators. During no weekly period of the war were aviators more active; and in this branch of warfare the Entente Allies seem to have secured an undoubted superiority.

The results of the German submarine campaign were apparently much less serious than for many weeks previously, but the menace has not yet been overcome or diminished to inconsiderable proportions. Some brief accounts of individual disasters to shipping have been given out during the week, and these will be found herein under "News of the Sea."

For the further prosecution of the war the Supreme War Council at Versailles appointed General Ferdinand Foch generalissimo on the Western front, and the appointment has been received with general approbation by the press of the Allied countries. Another gratifying episode of the week was the placing of 100,000 American troops at the disposal of General Foch; and more men will be sent forward as rapidly as transport facilities can be provided. Speculation is rife as to what will be the next move by either side; but trying events of the past two weeks have given the sympathizers of the Entente Alliance full confidence for the future, knowing as they now do the heroism of the men at the front and the vast resources available for their maintenance and succor.

In consequence of the large amount of correspondence in this issue, and owing to the fact that because of changes in our printing staff we go to press six hours earlier than usual, we are obliged to omit a number of items—both news and editorial—that would otherwise have been printed.

Remember this! Paint insurance on your buildings is just as important as fire insurance.

Sherwin-Williams Paints and Varnishes

Fire may never come, but the deteriorating effect of the weather on buildings of every kind is certain, unless protected by paint.

Unprotected wooden surfaces crack and become open and porous, then decay and rot starts. This means expensive repairs, which can all be avoided by the regular use of paint.

Examine your buildings now—A little money spent in painting at once may save you much larger expenditure a little later.

Sherwin-Williams Paint, Prepared, is the ideal paint for outside use. It is made of the purest and best materials, thoroughly mixed and ground by powerful machinery according to special formulae, the result of years of experiment and experience in paint making.
