CHIGNECTO POST AND BORDERER

SACKVILLE N. B., APRIL 12. 1894

THE ORIGIN OF THE TARIFF.

The discussion in the house of commons on the budget does not deal with the tariff changes to any extent. So far as the tariff bill is attacked outside parliament the assault is made on behalf of industries said to have been deprived of legitimate protection. Some of the journalistic free traders have suddenly become concerned for the welfare of the industries they formerly described as pap-fed. Those which approved the reductions in duties, compromise by declaring that the government has adopted reforms long agitated by liberals. As it is not easy to mention anything which the opponents of the government have not agitated the charge is not easily denied. But after all it is not material by whom the changes were advocated in the past. If they are good the country will get the same benefit from them whether they have been revolving in the mind of Sir Richard Cartwright, or are the invention of his foes. There was reason to believe that the credit for some of the more important changes in the interest of the farmer would be claimed as the result of a longish letter or two contributed to the POST by a Sackville agriculturalist. But up to date Mr. Fawcett has not fathered the tariff of 1894 and the POST is too modest to make the claim for its contributor lest it seem to overstep the bounds of proper reserve on its own account.

The establishment of a dairy school in connection with the Sussex creamery and cheese factory, to be followed by a simliar course of instruction at Nappan is a practical move. It is of the highest importance that the cheese of the Maritime provinces should have a good name in the English market. Our people have not had the same training and experience as those of Ontario and the Eastern Townships. But our climate is better, and so in general is the pasturage in the last summer months, and the water all the year round. Canadian cheese ranks far above that known as American. That from the Maritime provinces should be the best of the Canadian cheese. But the manufacture is an art and must be acquired. The government in offering free tuition to those who are prepared to avail themselves of it has given the best encouragement now required for the prosecution of this natural industry.

AT OTTAWA the members are still talking budget, that is to say they are still discussing the state of the country. It is said that the late Lord Sherbroke once observed a member of parliament using an ear trumpet in order to catch the words of some house of commons orator, and expressed surprise that a man should refuse to avail himself of his natural advantages. There is no such cause for complaint at Ottawa. The deaf avail themselves of the privilege of not hearing and those who can hear use their legs to place them out of ear shot. Away from Ottawa a great body of intelligent electors are improving the opportunity of skipping that part of the papers containing the budget debate, while of course Hansard is avoided by everybody who has the misfortune to come near it.

Attorney General Blair proposes to prove to the satisfaction of at least three out of five members of a legislative committee that he did not know about Mr. Quinn and the alleged sale of offices. He does not however propose to allow Mr. Powell, Mr Pitts and the three ministerial members to enquire whether there was a sale of office to Mr. Quinn, and a payment of money with the election fund by him. This it appears is a matter of no consequence.

The POST supplement published this week which gives a very fair and correct idea of Sackville, its business men and its prospects is due directly and almost entirely to that enterprising ex-printer Mr. Chas. J. Willis. He it was who visited our representative business men and ascertained the facts of their lives and work: he it was who wrote up this matter in the choice and expressive English which our readers will find throughout the supplement: he it was who "stuck" a great part of the type, who read and corrected the proofs and assisted in making up the forms; and he it is who will receive such slight renumeration as the poor printer, in addition to the pleasure of doing good, is accustomed to receive for his weary toil. The POST is satisfied with the commendation of an active conscience and the mere cost of printing. We trust that the supplement may serve its purpose and give outside people some idea of Sackville as it is: for undoubtedly Sackville with its capital and enterprise, its situation near the Nova Scotia coal fields and its excellent facilities for shipment of freight by water or land, its healthful climate and its educational advantages is destined to become one of the centres of population for the Maritime Provinces. Nor is time so far distant. No town in the Maritime Provinces has gone ahead during the past five years as Sackville has and in no other town are there so many signs of an abundant prosperity for the future. And best of all people of Sackville are acquiring more and more faith in the village and are learning more and more to patronize home industry.

Two days after Mr. Willis began work on his supplement an agent of Progress arrived in Sackville to enter on the same work. He visited only two stores and then finding himself too late sadly packed his valise and returned to the city of fog. Progress is quite a hustler in its way but it has to get up very early in the morning and sit up considerably after twelve o'clock at night to get ahead of the CHIGNECTO POST.

—Work on Yarmouth's $40,000 hotel, Le Grande, under course of construction by Rhodes, Curry & Co., is making rapid progress and it will be finished in a few weeks. It will be the finest hotel building in the Maritime Province. Work had been suspended on account of financial embarassments but it is understood that all difficulties have been overcome and the hotel will be open in June.

The Provincial Legislature.

THE WEEK'S WORK AT FREDERICTON.

On the 4th inst. the debate on Stockton's motion that prerogative rights of crown regarding distribution of insolvent corporations and persons should be abolished was continued by Sivewright, Powell and Stockton who favored resolution.

White's amendment that the motion be not now put was lost, the vote being: 14 to 17.

The resolution was then put and carried.

Mitchell committed a bill incorporating societies for the sale and distribution of seed grain on credit. It was promoted from Kent county where such societies were doing excellent work among the farmers. Agreed to with amendments.

On motion of Blair, seconded by Stockton, rule 8, for the admission of private bills was extended till the 12th inst.

Phinney made his inquiry as to whether a complaint had been made by John Taylor, of Kingston, Kent County, against Hugh M. Ferguson, Justice of the Peace and what action had been taken. Blair said such an action had been made but he did not think it well to state its nature to the House. The complaint, however, had been duly investigated and nothing disclosed to show that a case of any gravity had been made out against Mr. Ferguson and it would be allowed to drop.

Powell committed a bill to enable the University of Mount Allison College to issue debentures. This was agreed to with amendments.

The bill to provide a woodman's lien for wages was agreed to with amendments.

On the following day the Woodman's Lien bill was amended to make the stumpage of private owners as well as of the crown a first lien.

Mr. Killam introduced a bill to provide for a county valuation of the county of Westmorland during the present year.

Mr. Blair committed a bill relating to levying and assessing rates and taxes.

On motion of Mr. Killam the committee on the Quinn declaration were empowered to sit during sessions of the House.

Answering Mr Phinney's inquiry Emmerson said Mr. Alfred Haines is and has been for years in the employ of the public works department; that his duties are to oversee and inspect bridges and other public works and generally to attend to the same; that he receives no fixed salary but according to the services rendered, and that he is allowed what is necessary for travelling and incidental expenses.

Mr. Emmerson committed a bill to revive, amend and continue several acts, relating to the Moncton and Harvey short line railway connection company. Agreed to.

Mr. Mitchell committed the appropriation bills. Agreed to.

Pitts presented petitions of grand divisions, Sons of Temperance, praying for certain amendments in the liquor law of 1887 and for a plebiscite on the question of prohibition.

Emmerson introduced a bill relating to the office of Deputy Sheriffs.

Sievewright's bill amending the law authorizing the Gloucester municipality to issue debentures was agreed to.

Powell committed a bill empowering the Sackville Rural Cemetery Company to acquire and appropriate additional lands. Progress was reported with leave to sit again.

Powell introduced a bill respecting St. Joseph's College.

—The bill respecting liens of mechanics, laborers, and others was agreed.

Blair recommitted the Assessment bill.

Progress was reported with leave to sit again.

Powell recommitted a bill empowering the Sackville rural cemetery to acquire and expropriate additional lands Agreed to with amendments.

Powell introduced a bill further relating to the county courts.

Wells introduced a bill amending the law relating to justices of civil courts.

Phinney committed a bill to revive and continue an act incorporating the Western Railway Co. Agreed to with amendments.

The Wilson Tariff bill is now fairly before the United States, and despite predictions to the contrary is thought likely to pass that chamber substantially as it now reads. The adoption of the act by congress would bring into effect the reciprocity clauses of the New Canadian tariff, and cause breadstuffs and lumber to be admitted into Canada free.

The Parrsboro Shore.

FAMOUS VISITORS TO THE PLACE THAT IS HALLOWED BY HISTORY AND LEGEND.

There is a story
Untold in glory
That hangs around the Parrsboro shore—

and if any bard wants those lines to begin a poem with, he's welcome to them. They are not copyright; they are the scant gift of a tantalizing muse. But after all, the Parrsboro shore is too extensive a subject to be described in verse. It is too vast a subject to be properly handled in prose. Hence those who have been spared the verse will pardon the prose.

This is not going to be a continuous, easily-flowing, connected series of letters. It will be a mysterious mixture composed of the enchanter Glooscap and the ship Glooscap, of Captain Kidd the pirate and Captain Howard the shipbuilder, of the Devil and Tom Walker, of everything and nothing, of anything else that comes handy. When one is tired of hearing of Glooscap, one will hear of the Screecher, and when one gets tired of hearing about both of them, one will hear of Glooscap again. Now is the time to subscribe.

This Glooscap—or Foolscap, as some perter calling him, was the Big Injun of the Micmacs and Melicetes. This is the being alluded to in the Indian ballad, of which the well known song is a free translation:—

"Did you ever see the devil
With his little iron shovel?"

The "little" is ironical. For the shovel with which Glooscap broke the beavers' dam was assuredly not small, judging from the fact that the shovelful—

Well, this was the way of it. The beavers, Glooscap's greatest enemies—and you'll know some day how it was that they were his greatest enemies—built a big dam from Cape Blomidon to the opposite shore of Minas Basin, that is, the Parrsboro shore. When they had got the dam all nicely finished, and the people of the Annapolis Valley were in the midst of a great flood, and apple-trees were floating around, and there were a good many washouts on the W. & A. R, Glooscap came from the Tantramar marshes, where he had been bito-building, over the Boar's Back, to the rescue. It was at that part of the dam that touched the Parrsboro shore that he buried his dyking-spade. Then there was a rush of mighty waters. The whole great mass took a swing around; and is now a long mountain stretching far westward from Cape Blomidon, and parallel to the Parrsboro shore. And the western end, which once touched that shore, is now called Cape Split, or by the Indians Pleegun, which means "the opening of a beaver dam."

And the shovelful? well, some believe one thing concerning it; some the other; The best authorities say that the beavers hastened up the shore, and that Glooscap flung at them a shovelful of earth, which is now Five Islands. A few people say that he had no shovel—that he made the break in the dam and the shot at the beavers with his hands. The reader may take his choice.

The Indians on the St. John River say that there was only one beaver near the dam, and that Glooscap slung a rock at him. The rock fell into the St. John near Grand Falls, making a considerable splash; the beaver escaped. But thinking people are inclined to doubt this story, and pin their faith to the Five Island theory, as these are only fifteen miles from Parrsboro, and would not be much of a pitch for a man like Glooscap. Still, the Indians on the St. John offer to show anybody the rock.

Glooscap had many a feast at Partridge Island, two miles from Parrsboro, with his boon companion, Kit-poos-e-agunow, who, like Malcolm, was taken untimely from his mother, and was thrown down to the bottom of a well. He was as much at home at its depths as Glooscap's uncle, the Great Turtle, would have been, and came from the well in as fine a condition as the cat in the nursery rhyme. He was the only being that ever existed that would not have been scared to be behind the bat when Glooscap was "in the box."

One night Glooscap and Kit (his whole name does not bear repetition) went out on the basin to fish by torchlight. They were more successful than the famous fisherman Simple Simon, who fished in a pail instead of a basin for they speared a whale, which was tossed into their stone canoe. They took it to Partridge Island, and ate it, blubber, bones and all. Not a single trace of that whale may now be found at Partridge Island.

Old Glooscap used to amuse himself somewhat after the style of the prophet Jonah. Like the famed stowaway he had a whale for an excursion boat; the only difference being that the prophet, who liked being in the shade, rode in a cramped position in the hold, whereas Glooscap was wont to remain on deck. Not content with a whale-back, and having a regard for posterity that night have aroused the ire of Sir Boyle Roche, he formed the "Boar's Back," the wonderful roadway that stretches over so great a portion of Cumberland, and which the country people aptly describe as a "curiosity." He did this great engineering work in order to accommodate some friends of his that were staying at Fort Cumberland, which, in those days, had a name that, turned into English, is Hardwood Point. These friends wanted to go to Parrsboro, and could not wait for the train.

The powers of evil were not at all friendly to the good Glooscap. One night they came to Partridge Island to tear down the wigwams, but Glooscap was ready for them. The giant summoned the frost-sprites who, in the language of the Indians "froze onto" the evil powers, and left them dead in the woods. The survivors have plagued mankind ever since.

Glooscap engaged an old woman as his wigwam keeper, and a beautiful youth was his chore-boy. The giant dwelt on Partridge Island for a long time, showing the Indians many things in woodcraft and medicine. But these people did not always treat their benefactor with proper respect, so he gave a farewell party to all the country's birds and beasts, with the exception of his enemies the beavers. There came the wolf, wolf, wolf, the old red wolf at the door—as Bliss Carman would remark—and there came the bull and the bear, and the little bird who told of it—the famous "bird in the greenwood tree." At the close of the At Home the Micmac Hiawatha stepped into his stone canoe, and paddled away to the islands of the blessed. After his departure there was as great confusion among the beasts as there was at the tower of Babel, for they no longer understood one another. Many feuds arose from this cause, which their decendants continue till this day.

But as surely as Boabdil, who now iergns under the ground, shall return to Granada, and again establish his court there, so shall Glooscap come back, call to life the hunting dogs that he turned into stone, hnd once more rule along the shores of the Basin of Minas.

The owls still mourn for Glooscap, and may be heard in the woods near Partridge Island crying "Koo koo skoos! Koo koo skoos!" which, any Indian will tell you, means, "Oh, I am so sorry! Oh, I am so sorry!" And the loons, once the huntsmen of Glooscap, have ever since been seeking their great master.

Other important men besides Glooscap have wandered about the Parrsboro shore. The explorer Champlain was probably the first white man who ever visited Parrsboro. He was there in 1604, and wrote, "in language quaint and olden," a faithful description of these shores. DuVivier, who would have been a great man had he carried out his contract of capturing Acadia, was there on his way to Mines. Coulon de Villiers and his three hundred embarked at Parrsboro for Grand Pre', where on a dark night in February, 1747, they massacred the Massachusetts colonel Noble and his followers.

"Old Ben Church did not neglect to visit the Parrsboro shore when on his little excursions but there have been far more popular visitors to this part of Nova Scotia than the enterprising Benjamin.

Such a world-wide traveller as Capt. William Kidd would certainly not neglect to visit that region, and the private king buried untold wealth at Five Islands, Partridge Island, West Bay, Spencers Island, Advocate, Isle Haut, and numerous other places along the coast, "as he sailed.

One night the captain and his crew came up the Parrsboro river in a boat, with a great chest of treasure. A hole was dug, and the chest was lowered into its depths. Then Kidd asked, "who will guard this gold?"

"I will," said a big negro. Then it was that the captain gave an example of that exquisite humor for which he was noted. "Guard it, then," he said, playfully drawing a pistol and shooting the negro. The black man fell into the hole, and the treasure and its guardian were soon covered by their mother-earth.

And now, on any of those evenings when the wind seeks for buried treasure in every cave along the Parrsboro shore, the spirits of the captain and his crew come up the river, and the weird scene of murder and burial is again enacted.

The visits of Winslow and his men to the French settlements of Acadie were quite as distasteful to Parrsboro Acadians as to the immortalized sufferers at Grand Pre'. The homes of the Acadians of Parrsboro were burned, and their cattle were driven into the woods, According to Hannay, it is not now known whether they went to Virginia, Pennsylvania or Maryland.

Some Machias privateers, who did not behave as genteely as summer boarders should, visited the Parrsboro shore after the expulsion, and the thoughtful inhabitants prepared for the reception of their guests by building a blockhouse on the hill near Partridge Island. In June 1780, eight privateers landed at the island and called upon James Shannon, who kept the first store in Parrsboro,

Lieut. Wheaton and six of his men went from the blockhouse to welcome them, and their greeting was so hearty that the Machias commander and six of his men were killed, and the others were induced to prolong their visit.

"The mysterious stranger," Henry More Smith, half man, half devil, who for years was the wonder and terror of the good people of New Brunswick visited this part of the country, a monopoly of mystery, he did not care for this region of spooks and spectres.

The most uncanny visitor that ever terrified a village came to Parrsboro place about forty years ago. It was the famous "Screecher", which took up its abode on a small island in the river. Its yellings could be heard for five miles. The wise woman of the village differed in regard to the sex of the stranger, some saying that it was the spirit of the negro whom Kidd killed, and others declaring that it was the ghost of a woman who had drowned herself in the river. And to this day the man who dares to contradict either faction of these wise women must needs be wise indeed.

One wild night, two men were crossing a bridge over the river. One of these was from "the land o' ghoists," and was not afraid of spook or fiend. When they got to the middle of the bridge, they found the screecher was below them, for a wild yell shook the structure to its foundations, and the men were thrown on their faces. It was useless for them to rise while the screecher was beneath the bridge, for at every shriek the men fell in the dust. At last the Scotchman cried, "In God's name, which of the twa men do you want?" The conjured spirit then went back to the mill. The building was soon afterwards torn down, whereupon the screecher took its departure, and no longer disturbed the slumbers of the quiet village.

Although the untuneful being has never come back, Parrsboro and vicinity still have many a visitor from the other world. There is a female spirit, with bare feet and a veil of white crape, that haunts a dugway near Parrsboro. There is a ghost in one of the graveyards there, who mounts his tombstone every dark night and delivers political speeches to the silent dead. Parrsboro is as full of "brownyis and bogilis" as Gawin Douglas' famous book.

The lover of wonders natural and supernatural should not fail to follow the example of the great men who have visited those shores. Judging from the number of ghosts that are wont to walk about Parrsboro, it seems as if those who when in the flesh, do not see the place, cannot rest in their graves until they have expiated this sin of omission. The great men who went there when alive, and behaved themselves are not disturbed.

Of the Parrsboro shore, that pleasant Place I'll say no more at present,— the lines are coming in "jewels, five syllables long," now, when they're not needed—but, to use the standing-galley threat of the local newspaper controversialist, "concerning this matter there will be more anon."

EDWARD BAXTER PERRY.

This blind pianist will appear in Beethoven Hall April 23rd and 24th. No one can afford to lose the opportunity of hearing him. There is no hall or Opera House in New Brunswick which contains a grand piano on which Mr. Perry would play except Beethoven, and in this fact the students and citizens of Sackville are fortunate. Mr. Perry controls his audience from the beginning of the programme to the end, and will sometimes move to tears and always enrapture—not only lovers of music but those who never before took the slightest interest in it. True music has a soul as well as a body, a vital principle within its form of beauty, and this all who hear Mr. Perry are ready to acknowledge. He stands above all other American pianists in the opinion of musical journals Press notices can be had at Goodwin's Book Store where seats are not on sale All seats are reserved, and orders have been received from Amherst and Moncton, so all interested will do well to get a good seat early.
