The Nativity.

When Jesus left his throne above
  The tidings through creation rang,
Angels adored his wondrous love
  And all the Sons of morning sang:
Far flowed the high exultant sound
  From sea to sea, from shore to shore,
From heavenly hosts assembled round
  To gaze, and wonder, and adore:—
"Glory to God who reigns on high
And everlasting peace to all beneath the sky!"

"He comes—He comes—the long foretold—
  The light and hope of ages past,
The joy of all the saints of old,
  On the sad earth appears at last;
He comes, but not in form Divine,
  Not in the garb that angels wear—
Oh, Son of God! what love is thine
  The lowliest human form to bear:—
Glory to God who reigns on high,
And everlasting peace to all beneath the sky!"

"For thee no glittering pomp attends,
  No palace opes its golden gate—
No loud rejoicing cry ascends,
  No eager throngs in reverence wait;
There lies no pleasant place of rest,
  No hand is there the path to smooth,
No power to heal thy stricken breast,
  No heart to love, no voice to soothe:—
Glory to God who reigns on high,
And everlasting peace to all beneath the sky!"

"But there await thee want and woe,
  Anguish and tears await thee there,
'Tis thine the depths of grief to know,
  And the keen pangs of fierce despair.
Thy crown shall be the woven thorn,
  Thy throne the cross of agony,
'Tis thine to wear the robe of scorn,
  In grief to live, in woe to die:—
Glory to God who reigns on high,
And everlasting peace to all beneath the sky!"

"But thou shalt triumph o'er them all,
  Till all the lands thy power obey,
The vanquished hosts of sin shall fall,
  And Hell and Death shall flee away.
And every knee to thee shall bend,
  And every heart thy name adore,
And evermore thy power extend
  From sea to sea, from shore to shore:—
Glory to God who reigns on high,
And everlasting peace to all beneath the sky!"

CHAPTER III.

CONTINUED.

The voyage was a long one, and Willie had plenty of time to become acquainted with his companions. After the first burst of sorrow had passed away, his lively and amiable disposition exhibited itself in a thousand ways. The officer and the China merchant became very fond of him and loved to talk with him. They admired his cleverness, his bright answers, and shrewd remarks. They also felt for his friendless condition.

The officer's name was Major Berton. He had lived for twenty years in India, and was now on leave of absence. The name of the merchant was Henry King.

They were so kind to him that he was soon quite as happy as ever. The griefs of childhood cannot last very long. New friends and new joys are eagerly welcomed. He soon became the inseperable companion of his two friends.

He was fond of singing, and had a very sweet voice. It was a pleasant sight to see the bright faced boy upon the quarterdeck, singing the sweet hymns which his mother taught him, the gray headed merchant, and the dark faced soldier listening in delight, and urging him to sing more. Then the officer would tell him a story of the Indian wars, of long and terrible marches in Cabul or Afghanistan, of sufferings in the desert of perils in the jungle, of tremendous battles on the plains of Scinde. To these Willie would listen breathlessly, only interrupting the narrative by eager questionings or half suppressed groans. The other would then tell of China, of the vast cities with innumerable inhabitants, hundreds of thousands of whom lived in little boats and died there, of lofty temples, and limitless plains, of vast rivers, great fleets, and crowded ware-houses.

Their voyage was attended by many wonderful incidents. Once the skies grew black with a suddenness that was astonishing. Vast ebon clouds rolled overhead, crushing together, and the sea all around rose in long heavy swells, though there was no wind. Gradually the clouds came together in an enormous heap almost overhead, and hung downward as though the weight was too heavy for the skies to bear. The sea beneath hissed and tossed, the clouds lowered further and further downward, until at last sea and sky united. Then followed a wonderful scene. The cloudy column which had thus been formed passed with marvellous rapidity over the sea, turning and twisting violently and drawing the water upward into the bosom of the cloud. At last it burst in a deluge of water, with a roar like thunder. The black clouds spread far away over the vault of heaven and the scene ended in a storm.

At another time they witnessed a hurricane. It burst upon them almost in a moment. They had left the deck but a few minutes, and hearing the first crash of the tempest they hurried out. All was changed. The sky was covered with clouds and the whole face of the sea white with foam. A tremendous wind was beating upon the ship, and the sailors were taking in all sail. Suddenly a violent squall struck them with such force that the ship turned over at once as though it were a toy, and lay with her broad side down upon the surface of the sea. Two sailors were hurled overboard and lost, while all on board the ship clung for their lives to ropes, and beams, and whatever was nearest. The storm grew more and more violent, and the ship lay completely at the mercy of the gale. Sometimes she would slowly rise as if trying to right herself, but the next moment a more violent squall would throw her back. At last the Captain's voice was heard crying, "cut away the masts." The sailors sprung to obey, and the sound of axes cutting the huge timber, and severing the ropes, rose above the roar of the tempest. It was at this moment that Willie's character was seen in such a way as to endear him still more to his companions. He was close by his two friends clinging to the cabin door. At the very height of the gale, when all seemed lost, his sweet voice arose calmly and without a tremor of fear, singing one of his mother's favorite hyms.

"Jesus lover of my soul
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the raging billows roll,
While the tempest still is high.
Hide me oh my Saviour hide,
Till the storm of life is past,
Safe into thy haven guide,
Oh receive my soul at last."

"Are you not afraid at all Willie?" said Mr. King in profound astonishment.

"No Sir," said Willie meekly.

"You're a noble little fellow," cried Major Barton. "There must be something in your religion, if it can have such an effect on a boy."

Shortly after the mast went overboard with a crush like thunder, and the vessel, shivering all over, once more rode upright on the waters.

A few days afterwards they arrived at Cape Town, where they waited some time until a new mast had been fitted.

CHAPTER IV.

Thus the vessel proceeded with various incidents, common to a sea voyage.

They passed within sight of the island of St. Helena. Here the Major related to Willie the wonderful story of Napoleon Bonaparte, and the narrative gained new interest from the presence of his island prison. Willie had heard it all before, but never had it been so graphically described to him; for the Major had fought against Napoleon in the wars, and had been taken prisoner, and had seen him, and spoken to him face to face.

Week after week passed and they grew nearer, and still nearer to America. At length they entered a sheet of water, of different color from the ocean. The captain joyfully informed them that they might now consider themselves almost in America, for this was the famous Gulf stream.

Now the ships became more numerous, huge steamers crossed their path, wherever they looked sails appeared over the horizon. They were approaching the great metropolis. At last land arose before them, and light-houses, and green shores. It was the entrance to New York Bay.

"Willie," said the Major, accosting him as the ship passed Staten Island, "we will now part, and it is not possible that we will meet again. Let me give you something to remember me by. I would give you a Bible, but your mother has already supplied you with that. Let me give you this watch. If you are led by this to heed the flight of time, and make every hour of your life of use, then it will be your best possession next to your mother's Bible."

So saying, he handed Willie a splendid gold watch, which the boy took with the utmost pleasure and surprise. Upon the inside was engraved,—"To Willie, from his friend, George Berton." Mr. King smiled as he saw it and said, —"Well Willie, we at least will be able to see one another some times, for we shall be neighbours." The watch had been obtained at Cape Town.

Now the sights increased all around, and the wonders of New York bay gradually unfolded themselves. Willie stood absorbed by the glories of the scene, and admired the soft beauty of the view, so different from the glowing fervor of a tropical landscape. Most surprising to him however was the vast and ever increasing number of ships and sailing vessels. They lay all around at anchor, or darted across the surface of the water, or drifted lazily with the tide.

At length the city itself appeared in all its far spreading greatness, encircling the noble harbor, and sending forth its fleets to all lands. The deep roar of a populous city came up from afar, and sounded solemnly in his ears.

He saw the wharves with their crowds of shipping, and hosts of men of all kinds, busy at their various employments; with horses, carriages, carts and waggons, dogs and barrows.

After some delay a tug boat came out and towed the ship up to the wharf. From the quarter-deck Willie looked down upon the scene beneath, the confusion, the turmoil, the noise, the excitement. Crowds of carriages, and carts, and hand wagons, throngs of eager men; horses rushing to and fro; cabmen flourishing their whips, and shouting; hotel runners thrusting out their cards. Willie looked upon it, wondering how he could ever reach his destination.

"Which are your trunks Willie?" asked Major Berton, and Willie hurried off to collect his baggage. It was soon ready. The China merchant seated Willie by his side and told him to wait patiently. The Major ordered the baggage off, and went to see that it was packed safely in the cab."

"We are going to see you safely to your destination" said his companion. "It would be very difficult for you to find your way there alone. Besides, we want to know where our little friend lives. You have their address."

"Yes Sir," said Willie pulling out his little pocket book, and showing a leaf wherein was written the address in the firm bold hand of his father.

The Major now returned. They started off, and soon reached the wharf. The cab was piled high with their baggage. They jumped in, and soon were rattling along at a furious pace.

Willie was so absorbed by the wonders around him that he spoke not a word, but sat with earnest eyes looking upon the unusual sights. The lofty warehouses with their vast stores of merchandise in front entering or leaving; the countless carts and waggons, the large dray-horses the steam-hoisting engine, all these at first astonished him. But soon they reached Broadway. Here new wonders burst upon his view. There was Trinity church with its lofty spire, and before and behind the long vista crowded with houses and people. The splendid stores fronted with freestone or marble, glittering with signs, and bright colored goods; the hotels and public buildings with stately porticoes; the churches with their rich architecture and beautiful windows; the vast crowds of people, all hurrying, busy, eager, unresting, which never diminished, but still as they passed on, increased around them; streams of human life with the rushing torrents of horses and equipages of every size and every kind; above all, the deafening roar of a thousand sounds all mingled into one; such was the scene.

They drove for miles, then they turned off into smaller streets where the houses were of modest appearance. At length they stopped in front of a neat house with a door-plate bearing the name—"H. Evans."

"This is the place," said the driver, as he opened the door.

A pale face appeared at the window of the house. Soon the door was opened. A lady stepped out and gave a look at Willie.

"Is this Willie—my nephew—I know it is," said she, "I am your Aunt Helen."

The next moment he was folded in her arms.

Soon the trunks were all on the sidewalk. The major and his companion would not step in the house, but bidding a kind farewell to Willie, they went their way.

Hymn.

Oh let me sing thy wondrous love,
  And sound a psalm of praise to Thee,
Who left Thy glorious throne above,
  And came to earth to die for me.

The suffering slave of dark despair,
  In bitterest grief I cried to Thee:—
Then didst Thou hear my mournful prayer
  And came to earth to die for me.

The pangs of grief, the stings of shame,
  And sorest woes were heaped on Thee,
In all I saw Thee still the same,
  I saw Thee bear them all for me.

I saw thy blood,—a crimson tide,
  I saw Thee hanging on the tree:—
Oh piteous sight! my Saviour died—
  And that dear Saviour died for me.

Oh Life—Oh Death—Oh Love Divine—
  Forever boundless—ever free—
That Life,—that Death,—that Love is mine
  Since Thou didst give them all for me.

Oh dying Friend,—my life, my love,
  My soul, my all, I give to Thee,
For Thou didst leave Thy home above,
  And came to earth to die for me.

MR. EDITOR:

I had the pleasure of attending the Concert given by the Portland Sabbath School on Tuesday evening, 8th inst., in the Mechanics' Institute. It was a very unfavourable evening. Still the hall was well filled, and all and appeared highly gratified. Several times there were bursts of applause between the verses, and several piecos were encored. Many of the audience appeared perfectly enraptured. I observed one old gentleman in particular, who would, I often feared, burst the buttons of his vest. He must have been "Grandpa" I guess, for his old heart seemed cheered to its very centre. The execution was good, remarkably so, though in the first part rather inferior to that of the Thursday previous. But that is not all we look for in a juvenile concert. It is the carrying out of the whole. The general arrangement was also good, notwithstanding three of the pieces sung on that occasion, were practised for the first time on the evening previous, and all the arrangements made within one month. The book used (the Oriole) was introduced among them but four weeks before. Still all appeared perfectly at their case, understand each other, and to know when and how to perform their parts. There was also superior taste displayed by their leader, in the selection of tunes to give variety, in arranging the voices to give effect to the different parts, in occasionally presenting short pieces, so as to prevent monotony, and the combining and carrying out of the whole in such a way as not only to keep up the interest of the audience, but also to heighten and increase it, so that at the close they were more anxious to hear them than at the commencement. Should they, as they promised, come out again in "Early Spring," they may depend upon a full house. But these are only the blossoms; the fruit is what we most admire. Look at it! over ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS clear of all expenses, spent for Sabbath School books and papers, to be put in the hands of the children every week, and read by them, to have their due effect in the formation of their characters, and in shaping their course in after life, perhaps the means of their conversion. The influence of these will increase and extend to others, as the learned Burritt beautifully expresses it, "like the little silvery circle which, set in motion by the falling pebble, expands from its inch of radius to the whole compass of the pool."

The above was intended for your last number, but the want of data prevented my having it ready in time. I will therefore add a few thoughts on the music and hymns now used in our Sabbath Schools here, for the benefit of our friends throughout the country. Portland was the first of the suburban, and the Bethel of the city Sabbath Schools to introduce the Sabbath School Music Book. Brussels St., Marsh Bridge, Carleton and Germain Street soon followed; so that now all our Schools have put aside the old collection of hymns, and adopted one more congenial to the juvenile mind, and better calculated to deepen their interest in the School. Listen to the harmonious sound of a hundred or more happy voices blending in one, as they thus sing from the "Sabbath School Bell," or "Oriole:—

"Never forget the Sabbath School,
  The lessons taught you there,
The gentle words of love and truth,
  The true and earnest care.
Remember, too, the teachers dear,
  Who oft for you will pray,
That Jesus, by his gracious love,
  May keep you in the way.

Can we forget the Sabbath School,
  The place of light and love;
Place where we learn of wisdom's ways,
  That leads to homes above?
Wherever we may wander here,
  When through the week we roam,
We'll not forget the teachers dear
  Of this our Sabbath home."

Let us step into another school, and listen to the Superintendent "line out" the hymn,

Great God how infinite art Thou,
What worthless worms are we!

Should there be any one present who can sing, he will perhaps lead off with "New Jerusalem," a few of the teachers joining in, while the scholars are enjoying themselves, Sam keeping time with a pin under Fred's ribs, and Ned occasionally applying his tuning fork to Joe's nose, to see if the pitch is well kept up. Do all witness this carelessness in a hymn of the former description? No,—

"They love to sing together,
Their hearts and voices one."

Why is this difference? The one is emphatically the children's song, just suited to their tastes, adapted to arouse their attention, and interest them. But the other is the Pilgrim's psalm, calculated to "lead his soul from earth away."

I make these remarks, hoping that our friends may do as we of the city have done. If so, they will find the children becoming more attached to their School, and in consequence its influence will become greater. And then these concerts will prove useful not only as an agreeable way of spending an evening, but also as a means of raising money. Brussels Street School last Fall, at a concert given by them, raised $90. It is just as easy for country schools to have concerts, and cash is just as valuable there as in the city,
