TIGHT BINDING
RELIURE TROP RIGIDE

WASHINGTON, August 1, 1861.

It is suspected here that the army of the Potomac will not be kept idle so long a time as has generally been predicted. Its reorganization proceeds with great rapidity. The new troops arriving here are placed at once in brigades, and pobably only a few days, at farthest only a few weeks, will be requisite, at the present rate of progress, to make a forward movement that shall be more successful than the last.

There is no reason why the Union armies should not be able to move during the summer months, as well as the rebel forces. The experience of medical men teaches the deleterious effects of the Southern climate upon Northern constitutions need not be dreaded during the first year of a residence in the South, and as far as the State of Virginia is concerned, there is nothing more to be apprehended from the climate for our troops than there would be in New York or Pennsylvania.

No doubt is entertained that Gen. McClellan will strike as soon as he is ready, without waiting for the weather. His plan of operation will not be disclosed until the precise moment for its execution. It is regarded here as an evidence of preparation for bold and energetic action that the military authorities decline to give any information whatever to the press.

WASHINGTON, August 1, 1861.

The War Department has received the following direct from Gen. Rosencranz by telegraph:—

August 1, 1861.

Gen. Cox reached Gauley bridge on the 29th ult. Gov. Wise fled without fighting, destroying the bridge to prevent pursuit.

We have captured 1,000 muskets and several kegs of cannon powder.

Many of the inhabitants of that section who have hitherto been strong secessionists denounce Gov. Wise for the wanton destruction of property, and were abandoning him and his cause.

His Western troops are rapidly disbanding.

The valley of the Kanawha is now free from rebel troops.

From the Evening Journal.

THE BLUNDER AT BULL RUN.

WASHINGTON, July 26, 1861.

Who is responsible for this great national disaster? Officials cannot answer—individuals may speak—their answers passing for what they are worth, according to the estimate which the public put upon their judgment and means of information.

Lieutenant General Scott, in the discharge of his duty as commander in-chief of the army, conceived and perfected a plan or programme, by means of which he confidently, as the results of a summer and fall campaign, anticipated the overthrow of the confederate army, and thus virtually to end the rebellion.

This plan, primarily, contemplated camps of instruction, where raw levies might, during the months of June, July and August, be subjected to discipline and inured to service, sending the regiments, as they became fit for duty, into the field, making room, as they departed, for green organizations.

With this disposable force (after the safety of the capital was assured) General Scott commenced operations at Fortress Monroe, near Harper's Ferry and in Western Virginia, the latter point being most favorable, profitting, as no other section did, by the co-operation and sympathies of loyal inhabitants. With Washington for his base of operations, the western wings of his army were to feel and fight their way southward until, at the appointed time, having reached their designated positions, all his columns were to move simultaneously, Richmond falling, as Mexico fell, before an irresistible army.

But this plan did not accord with the popular idea. Prominent individuals, whose counsels and clamors precipitated the outbreak, demanded precipitate action. Their demands were more and more clamorous, exciting appeals to popular feeling were soon followed by open aspersions and denunciations of Gen Scott. And finally, with a presumption and insolence unheard of, a leading journal, assuming command of the army, issued and reiterated the order, "On to Richmond."

While widely spread newspapers were thus weakening the administration by assaults upon its commanding general, his embarrassments were aggravated by the persistent hostility and every day aspersions of the Postmaster General, whose brother, a prominent member of Congress, assailed him from the stump.

Meanwhile Congress assembled. Senators and representatives, with more zeal than knowledge, caught up and retierated the cry, "On to Richmond." The impatient Congressmen were leading and influential. They waited upon the President to complain of the inactivity of the army, and upon General Scott, urging him, "On to Richmond."

And now the sensation journals began to disparage the strength and courage of the rebel army. "The rebels will not fight!" "The cowards will run!" &c., &c., appeared in flaming capitals over flash paragraphs. The whole popular mind was swayed by these frenzied appeals. A movement upon Manassas was universally and blindly demanded. Passions and animosities, kindred to those which once deluged France in blood, were being excited. The tyranny of the press, the denunciations of a Cabinet minister, and the impetuosity of a dozen members of Congress, exciting the masses, "moved" Gen. Scott "from his proprieties." For once in his life his purposes were thwarted—for once "his mind became the mind of other men." The result has shown that it was a fatal weakness. And yet who knows what would have been the effect of an adherence to his plan? The New York Tribune was educating millions to distrust the wisdom of the administration and the fidelity of the commanding generals. Every day emboldened its audacity—every rail and wire disseminated its treason—and every hour augmented the poupular discontent. Congress, though its session opened auspiciously, began to falter. "Madness ruled the hour," and a battle at Manassas, right or wrong, became not a military but a political "necesity."

It is not true, however, as has been asserted, that General Scott was constrained to hazard this battle by the President. Between the President, and with one exception, the Cabinet and General Scott, there has been mutual regard and confidence.

I will not stop to consider details or criticize acts. The major blunder includes all the minor ones. There should have been no general engagement until we were in the field with an army strong enough to overwhelm and crush out rebellion. There are other points at which we could be advantageously and successfully occupied.

But even if it were excusable to assault an army equal in numbers to our own, in its chosen position behind its intrenchments, the purpose should have been abandoned when the army of Manassas was reinforced by that from Winchester. Then, surely, the conflict was too unequal. With all the conditions and circumstances so changed General McDowell should have taken the responsibility of disobeying his orders. The reason would have justified him in the judgment of the government and people.

But the order of "On to Richmond," was obeyed, and where does it leave us? Where we were three months ago, with a harder conflict on our hands, and a dismal, if not doubtful future. The "On to Richmond" dictators have added another year to the war, an hundred millions of dollars to its cost, and opened graves for fifteen or twenty thousand more soldiers.

And what have we gained? Alas, too little for such a fearful expenditure of time, treasure, blood and reputation. We have learned what few doubted, that our army is all that is expected of it; that our men fought with the courage of veterans; that we may always, and under all circumstances, rely on them. We have learned what was also too well known, that the army was in many instances indifferently officered. We have learned, too, the importance and necessity of discipline. Effective troops, however excellent the material, cannot be found in workshops, the cornfields or the cities. They must have military training, without which every "On to Richmond" movement will prove a failure.

Though we have encountered a great and disastrous check—though we are pained and humiliated—we possess the means and the energy to retrieve allt if these means henceforth are wisely employed.

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN.

Arrival of the Fulton.

The steamer Fulton was intercepted off Cape Race at 4 A. M., on Friday morning.

Lord Russel goes to the House of Lords as Earl Russel. Lord Herbert will from illness resign the Secretaryship of War. Mr. Lever again denies charges against him in the House of Commons and motioned select committee to inquire. It was negatived without division.

A crowd had assembled before the residence of the British Consul at Warsaw and shouted Long Live Queen Victoria, and deposited boquets, showing gratitude for sympathy for Poland

The New Chancellor for Hungary declared to councillors determination to act according to constitution and wishes of the Nation.

Neapolitan dispatches continue to teem with acts of brigandage, pillage and murder on a great scale.

In the consistory at Rome on the 23d, the Pope pronounced a short allocution, in the course of which he declared himself grateful for the continued occupation of Rome by the French troops but was sensible of the abuse which the enemies of order have made and will make of the painful act of France in reconizing the Kingdom of Italy.

TURKEY.

Safetti Pacha, President of the Grand Council, has been dismissed, and is succeeded by Faud Pacha.

Ali Pacha has been definitely appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs.

VISIT OF THE QUEEN TO IRELAND.—It is announced that her Majesty the Queen will visit Ireland some time next month. The visit is to be a private one, and will, consequently, be free from pomp and cermony. The royal programme includes a four or five days' stay with the Earl of Carlisle at Dublin, a trip to the military camp at the Curragh, where the Prince of Wales is now staying, "learning military duty," and an excursion to the Lakes of Killarney. The Irish papers say the people are highly delighted with the prospect of her Majesty honouring the country with her presence. They are also busy about the Prince of Wales.

MISS MADELINE SMITH, whose trial and subsequent acquital at Glasgow, a few years since, for the poisoning of her lover excited so much attention, did not go to Australia, as was generally supposed, but to Plymouth, where a newspaper of that place states, "she has captivated may hearts and is now engaged to be married."
