Very Remarkable Cure of Diarrhoea.

"About six years ago for the first time in my life I had a sudden and severe attack of diarrhoea," says Mrs. Alice Miller, of Morgan, Texas. "I got temporary relief, but it came back again and again, and for six long years I have suffered more misery and agony than I can tell. It was worse than death. My husband spent hundreds of dollars for physicians' prescriptions and treatment without avail. Finally we moved Bosque county, our present home, and one day I happened to see an advertisment of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with a testimonial of a man who had been cured by it. The case was so similar to my own that I concluded to try the remedy. The result was wonderful. I could hardly realize that I was well again, or believe it could be so after having suffered so long, but that one bottle of medicine, costing but a few cents, cured me." For sale by all druggists.

There is just one prompt and thorough cure for Catarrh and it is fragrant healing Catarrhozone which goes right to the root of the trouble. PORT DANIEL

Aug 10th—One of the most successful bazaars and concerts we have ever had the pleasure of attending on the Gaspe Goast was held at Port Daniel on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th of August. The results of both undertakings reflect great credits on the Port Daniel people. The bazaar was made attractive by a display of pretty and useful articles at reasonable prices, it is to be regretted that "reasonable prices" cannot be more frequently applied to such sales, people in general do not care to give the exhorbitani prices often asked at bazaars simply because they are in aid of some good cause. On Thursday evening a good programme was provided and ably carried through. Mr. W A MacPherson presided as chairman for the evening, the hall was crowded to overflowing despite the fact that the evening was intensely hot. The sentiments of the audience were testified by the hearty manner in which applause was given. At the close of the entertainment refreshments were partaken of and the crowd dispersed.

The proceeds are to go towards improving the appearance of the cemetery A new fence is to be erected and other improvements made. The object is a good one, and the example one worthy of following.

Too many of our burying places are in a state of neglect. The epithet "gone but not forgotten" is not always borne out by the condition of the grave which it marks. It is well to show our respect for the dead in one way by the care we take of our sleeping places. Any entertainment for this purpose is worthy of our patronage

It is hoped that entertainments in P D may not be so rare in the futnre as in the past. Our neighbors must not again be allowed to forget that P D knows how to get up an entertainment

UNERRING JUSTICE.

The books say well, my brothers, each man's life
The outcome of his former living is;
The bygone wrongs bring forth sorrows and woes,
The bygone right breeds bliss.

Ye are not bound; the soul of things is sweet,
The heart of being is celestial rest.
Stronger than woe is will; that which was good
Doth pass to better—best.

What hath been bringeth what shall be and is
Worse—better—last for first and first for last;
The angels in the heavens of gladness reap
Fruits of a holy past.

—Sir Edwin Arnold.

SILCHESTER'S MYSTERY.

Remains of Some of the Old Roman Houses Are Missing.

The excavations carried out during the last fourteen years by the Society of Antiquaries on the site of the ancient Romano-British City of Silchester ("Calleva Atrebatum") have revealed some very curious circumstances which have yet to be explained. The city is surrounded by a large wall nearly two miles in length, overhung with trees and overgrown with creeping plants, enclosing an area of 100 acres. Outside runs a deep fosse and large mound. This mound—sections of which have been taken—is composed solely of earth soil, while the fosse or ditch has been dug out of the gravel soil which is found a foot or so under the ground all over the country in and around Silchester, and of which one would suppose the mound to be made, since the surface soil would not have been sufficient by itself.

The question is, why was the mound made solely of earth soil, and where did this earth come from? The only explanation is that the mound is composed of all the earth removed from the surface when the foundations of the houses and streets were being formed and laid out; but this seems a curious thing to have done, for a gravel mound would have been far superior. When the remains of the houses and other buildings are uncovered there are found no traces, or very few, of the material of the upper parts, as on other Roman sites, except the foundations and pavements. Nor is any of the building material to be seen in neighboring churches, as at St. Albany Abbey, Guildford Castle, and other places, where Saxons and Normans have utilized in their churches and castles material from Roman sites. This seems to suggest that the walls of the buildings only extended a few feet above the ground, wood being used in the upper parts; but this could hardly have been the case in such an important place as Silchester, although this is the only explanation so far to account for the non-existence of the materials of the upper parts of the buildings.

There are also many pits 18 feet to 30 feet deep, at the bottom of which are found perfect pots among much rubbish and broken pottery. How did these come there? Some of the pits were possibly wells, and the pots might have been accidentally dropped in by those fetching water (the water breaking their fall and preventing them from being shattered), and after the wells were "dried up" they were used for throwing in rubbish—thus covering the vessels accidentally dropped in.

English Village Oddities.

Undoubtedly the most extraordinary township in England is that of Skiddaw, in Cumberland. It contains but one house, the occupier of which is unable to exercise the Briton's privilege of voting because there is no overseer to prepare a voters' list and no church or other place of worship or assembly on which to publish one.

The most remote village in England is that of Farley-cum-Pitton. This truly rural spot is thirty miles and a half from the nearest railway station. As a contrast to this may be mentioned the hamlet of Ystrad, about ten miles from Cardiff. This tiny settlement possesses two important main roads, two railways, and two large rivers.

A very unique feature is exclusively claimed by Trimley, a small village in Suffolk. In the one churchyard of the parish two churches are to be seen. Service is conducted three times a week in each of these churches at the same hour.

The deepest well in England is round at Hamilton, in Hampshire. It stretches 350 feet below the surface of the earth. About half-way down this well-shaft is a subway, three miles in length.

On the top of the parish church tower, in Bicknoller, Somersetshire, is a yew tree, now 5 feet high, and still growing in a hardy fashion. It is generally believed that the tree owes its origin to a seed dropped by a bird.

Perhaps the most splendidly decorated church in the Kingdom is that of Whitley Court, Worcestershire. It is entirely constructed of white marble, the pews are chastely carved, and the pulpit is of genuine Carrara marble, richly panelled with costly stones.

On the village green at Meriden, in Warwickshire, there is a large stone cross, which is supposed to mark the central point of England.

A Popular Error.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain is popularly supposed to be in appearance almost the duplicate of his father. As a matter of fact, there is very little facial resemblance between them, and in physique they are quite unlike. The Chancellor of the Exchequer's most prominent feature is not the nose, as in the case of Chamberlain pere, but the eyes, which are blue and with the prominence which sometimes, but not always, denotes eloquence of speech. Almost the only characteristic, physical or acquired, which father and son have in common, is an eyeglass, worn constantly in the right eye, and a slight delve in the walk. Their manner of speaking has many points of difference.
