The Commercial value of the Irish language has been definitely established by the Registrar of Trade Marks. He has just refused the application of a firm of flour merchants in South Wales for the registration of the word 'Shanice' as a trade mark. Opposition was lodged by the Irish Industrial Development Association. The Opposition was based on the ground that the use of an Irish word was calculated to mislead people in Ireland into the belief that the flour was milled in Ireland. This contention has now been upheld.

FREDERICTON, Saturday.—It is believed here the House will adjourn the first week in June. The budget debate will be continued in the legislature tomorrow and will probably finish Tuesday.

The following interesting sketch appeared in a recent number of the Railroad Trainman's Journal. The writer is Mr. Felix J. Koch.

With the various American railways vying, one with the other, for records for speed and the like, it is a rather interesting pilgrimage to make, to repair to the home of the first railway on the continent and, as best one can, to retrace the line of track.

Almost unknown indeed, is the fact that our first American railway had its origin later for it in Canada, in Nova Scotia, to be exact—out of the town of New Glasgow toward Stellarton.

Today the route is transferred by an electric line, running primarily to the Avonmouth, and is the most famous of Nova Scotia. The traction parallels a country road and incidentally a modern railroad track as well. You are carried in a valley of open fields and then among quaint red miners' houses built double. It is seven miles from Stellarton to New Glasgow by this route. Far hills are seen, sloping to the mist, above is the mine with its buildings of unimpeachable black. Otherwise there is only open country side.

The miners' homes, however, vary in monotony. They have green shutters of a decided overall, the curtains, behind the queer multi-paned windows. The door, too, into each house, opens in a path, a gravelled and pebbled half way, where plants are set, the vestibule serving to keep out the cold in the winter. Coal piles stand high about and then you are crossing the track of the old railway.

By and by you are at the mine. But this is a tale in itself. You are rather more interested in the railway, and the traditions that survive as regards it.

The first railway in America, according to local authorities, began at the old Ford mine near Stellarton running along the river for probably six miles.

The last train over the route made the course in 1859. Then the railway was abandoned, there being no more shipping done over it after once the Ford pit was half full of water now, and a half-dozen of men remain buried in the river beside it since that time.

The railway had been built by the mine company in 1848, and was owned by it.

The oldest engine of America's railways, as many will recall, was sent to the World's Fair in 1853. It was returned to Canada, and is now in Montreal. It was destroyed at that time that the first engineer should accompany it to Chicago, but this his age forbade.

The old man, Davis by name, lived at Stellarton, and is still believed to be alive—though where, no man can say. The fireman was a man named Fraser, and he, too, has trekked to parts unknown.

Officially speaking, the first railway in America, ran from Fort Pitt through New Glasgow to Abernethy, a distance of nine miles. In this nine mile grade there was a stretch of twelve inches—it was at first thought impossible for a train to cover the 'climb'. Local coal was used in the engine and this was fired at the front, the tender being at the front of the locomotive.

'Boys'—one recalls, from some of them 'boys' who are now old men at New Glasgow—were wont to jump on and off the old train—an indication of its speed, speed. The road is believed to have been actually built with English capital, and no expense was spared. Every culvert for example, was built of dressed stone.

On railroads it is still believed to be possible for a train to cover the 'climb'. Local coal was used in the engine and this was fired at the front, the tender being at the front of the locomotive.

Part of the old cradle rails, on which it ran, survive. These are the rails. The rails were set up on what resembled a chair—clear over the sleepers however. Trains out of New Glasgow will run over the old sleepers, as they get just above the bridge. Part of the old track, too, is utilized by a local coal dealer, Munro by name, who handles the New Arcadian coal. Over this section a picturesque shunting engine is operated.

Later, two locomotives were run on the line where the 'Sampson' had been the first one. Then the line became more cosmopolitan, until it had to make way for a better.

And the town of the first railway—New Glasgow—Railways at the beginning do not seem to have proved the 'march of time' if one would judge by it. Almost as it was then, so now, New Glasgow is a quiet, rather fascinating country town. There are the usual neat country stores, such as one finds all over Nova Scotia towns—outlined against the dull grey skies that prevail even in July in this province—when the thermometer hovers around sixty degrees. Today the carriages and government railway runs through it—it is a hundred and five miles to Halifax.

Where love is we forget labor.

The angel's song can always be heard the lowly.
You cannot keep the joy you will not share.

The bonds of a good home are forged in heaven.
Your sympathies determine the breadth of your life.

The wise know enough to sacrifice a goal deal of wit.
The heart frozen with selfishness is sure to be fruitless.

Faith in God may be manifested by good feeling for men.
Many a church is praying for a shower that needs only a thaw.

Halving another's sorrow is a sure way of doubling your own joy.
The best cure for the blues is to try to be a blessing to someone.

If you cannot find the divine everywhere you will find it nowhere.
No man ever reaped any more happiness than he was willing to sow.

The hand does not reach very far nor very helping without the heart.
Often it is the pull on our heart strings that gives us our biggest lift.

Often it is the pull on our heart strings that gives us our biggest lift.
The best way to lead one to heaven is to help him to a good home here.

The tear of pity is a good thing but it doesn't go far in a thirsty world.
Inviting men to your firelight may do them as much good as inviting them to your faith.

MONTREAL, Saturday.—His Eminence Cardinal Logue, Primate of all Ireland, reached Montreal this morning, and was met by Mayor Payette and Archbishop Bruchet.

After Mass at the Archbishop's palace, Cardinal Logue cordially received the representatives of the Star, and expressed his great delight at this trip to and about Niagara Falls.

Discussing the more serious topic of some rule, His Eminence remarked that all Ireland are bound to get it, but he felt they would be satisfied with something less than the fullness of the home rule that Canada enjoyed.
