HOLDING THE BABY.
Introducing a Nice Point in Baby Carriage Etiquette.
That fellow "doesn't know the first thing about the etiquette of the baby carriage," remarked one of a group of men at Thirty-first and Main streets. The comment was made to all in a general way. One of the group, the man with a frayed collar and a look of patient resignation, gazed anxiously at a couple about to board a car. The mother was spurring in a desperate sort of way with one of those baby carriages which soap salesmen can open and close in a minute and the users in from five to thirty minutes.

"Don't see anything wrong with that," said the man with the frayed collar. "He's got to hold the baby even if she does have to wrestle with the carriage. You don't think he ought to hold the baby and take care of the carriage, too, do you?"

"Well, there's one thing sure," rejoined the objector—"the man doesn't know a thing about baby carriage etiquette. What you want to do is this: If the baby weighs more than the carriage, it's the man's place to hold the baby. If the carriage weighs more, he should hold the baby and the wife should hold the carriage. You're wrong off. What he ought to do is to hand the baby to his wife and the carriage to the conductor."

POINTING THE BONE.
Queer Superstition of the Native Blacks of Australia.
The native blacks of Australia are steeped in superstition. A black fellow will on no account go near the spot where another black has been buried. He has a deep rooted aversion to one particular bird—the wattle-bec—because, he says, "him all day talk, talk along a white feller, tellum all about black feller," and no opportunity is lost of killing these little birds.

Many tribes "bury" their dead by sticking them up into the forks of trees and there leaving them till the flesh has either dropped or been taken, leaving the bones clean. These bones are then taken down, the larger ones buried and the smallest handed round as keepsakes to those nearly related to the deceased.

Some of the blacks are so superstitious that they will not touch a bone which has been buried. They believe that the spirit of the dead will be angry if the bones are touched. They will not touch a bone which has been buried. They believe that the spirit of the dead will be angry if the bones are touched.

Tennyson's Cure For Shyness.
It is recorded in "Tennyson's Life" that the poet used to recommend to a younger brother the thought of the stellar spaces, swarming with constellations and traversed by planets at incredible rates for shyness, and a lady of my acquaintance used to endeavor as a girl to stay her falling heart on the thought of eternity at such moments. It is all in vain, however, the moment one cares very little about the stellar motions or the dim vistas of futurity and very much inclined to think of one's own cut of coat and the pressing necessities of the crisis and the desperate need to appear wholly unconcerned—Arthur C. Benson in Putnam's Reader.

A Terrific Tumble.
Most marvelous of all the stories of great falls is the account of Charles Woodcock's terrific tumble from a height of no less than 300 feet. It was in Venezuela, and he was making a parachute descent. The parachute refused to open till within 100 or 200 feet from the ground. Then it spread out suddenly and split. The unfortunate man crashed both ankles and both knees, broke his right thigh and hip, dislocated his spinal column and suffered other injuries. For a year in a hospital he recovered sufficiently to write an account of what was probably the most fearful accident mortal man ever survived.

Spilled Mercury.
Mercury spilled on a table or floor is somewhat hard to collect unless special precautions are taken, owing to its tendency to divide into small globules, which roll away at the slightest touch. A wet rag is made around the spilled mercury by the aid of a wash bottle or other similar means, it will be found that the globules of mercury cannot cross the ring. The mercury can then be collected in a small shovel made from a piece of tin card or even an ordinary envelope.

Race of Life.
There wouldn't be so very many men living if there weren't a hurdle or two to jump over in this race of life. There always have been obstacles, and there always will be, and it is of no use to repine over them.

Our Neighbors.
Sunday School Teachers: "Why did the Lord command us to love our neighbors? Little Lola—Oh, I guess it was another way of telling us to love our enemies."

It is really not difficult to cure kidney trouble in its first stages. All you have to do is give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial. They are the most effective remedy to be had for all kidney and urinary troubles.
